(1)
Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
98 505 SEP 24 1998
OFFICE OF THE CLERK

No. _____

In The

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1997

EDWARD H. MATHEWS,

Petitioner,

v.

SEARS PENSION PLAN and
SEARS ROEBUCK & COMPANY,

Respondents.

On Petition For A Writ Of Certiorari To The United States Court Of Appeals For The Seventh Circuit

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

PAUL E. SLATER
Counsel of Record
BRUCE S. SPERLING
ROBERT D. CHEIFETZ
SPERLING, SLATER & SPITZ, P.C.
55 West Monroe Street
Suite 3300
Chicago, Illinois 60603
312/641-3200
Counsel for Petitioner

COCKLE LAW BRIEF PRINTING CO., (800) 225-6964
OR CALL COLLECT (402) 342-2831

56pp

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

Ed Mathews represents a class of Sears retirees who elected to receive lump sum distributions under the Sears Pension Plan ("Plan"), which is qualified under ERISA. Sears present-valued these lump sum distributions by using a discount rate that is referred to in summary plan descriptions ("SPD"). The Plan, however, specified a different discount rate. In Mr. Mathews' case, the use of the SPD discount rate, rather than the Plan discount rate, reduced his lump sum distribution by $17,324.96. Mr. Mathews brought this class action to obtain the immediate and unconditional payment of the monies owed him and others pursuant to the Plan. The Questions Presented are:

1. When an ERISA plan unambiguously specifies the discount rate to be used in present-valuing lump sum distributions to retiring employees, and an SPD refers to a different rate, does an employer violate ERISA when it reduces the payments to the retirees by using the SPD rate rather than the rate specified in the plan itself?

2. Is a retiree who seeks the immediate and unconditional payment of money damages for breach of the provisions of an ERISA plan entitled to a jury trial under the Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution?

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

QUESTIONS PRESENTED i

OPINION BELOW 1

JURISDICTION 1

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND STATUTES INVOLVED 2

STATEMENT OF THE CASE 2

I. Background Facts 2

A. In Present-Valuing Lump Sum Retirement Distributions, Sears Used The Discount Rate Referred To In Summary Plan Descriptions Rather Than The Discount Rate Specified In The Plan 2

B. The District Court Proceedings 4

C. The Seventh Circuit Proceedings 5

1. Although the Seventh Circuit found that "the language of the Sears Plan . . . is unambiguous in favor of the class," the court nonetheless held that Sears' use of the January 1 rate set forth in the SPD did not violate ERISA 5

2. The Seventh Circuit, sua sponte and without analysis, ruled that Mr. Mathews had no right to a jury trial of his ERISA breach of contract claim 6

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT 7

TABLE OF CONTENTS – Continued

Page

I. The Seventh Circuit's Ruling Further Extends Circuit Court Conflict And Confusion Regarding The Treatment Of ERISA Claims Made Pursuant To The Terms Of An ERISA Plan When The Plan And SPD Conflict 7

A. The circuit courts do not agree under what circumstances the plan or the SPD will control in the event their terms conflict 8

B. The Seventh Circuit's opinion in Mathews adds to the confusion, and conflicts with the opinions of other circuit courts..... 10

II. The Seventh Circuit's Holding That An ERISA Plaintiff Is Never Entitled To A Jury Trial Conflicts With This Court's Seventh Amendment Rulings..... 12

A. The Tenth Circuit has described the nature of the issue here as a breach of contract.. 13

B. This Court has repeatedly held that claims for monetary relief are legal 15

CONCLUSION 17

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

CASES

Adams v. Cyprus Amax Minerals Company, 149 F.3d 1156 (10th Cir. 1998) 13, 14, 16

Bower v. Bunker Hill Co., 114 F.R.D. 587 (E.D. Wash. 1986) 16

Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Alabama v. Sanders, 138 F.3d 1347 (11th Cir. 1998) 14

Chiles v. Ceridian, 95 F.3d 1505 (10th Cir. 1996) 9

Cinelli v. Security Pacific Corp., 61 F.3d 1437 (9th Cir. 1995) 10

Curtis-Wright Corp. v. Schoonejongen, 514 U.S. 73 (1995) 12

Edwards v. State Farm Mutual Insurance Co., 851 F.2d 134 (6th Cir. 1988) 8

Fallo v. Piccadilly Cafeterias, Inc., 141 F.3d 580 (5th Cir. 1998) 9

Feltner v. Columbia Pictures Television, Inc., ___ U.S. ___, 118 S. Ct. 1279 (1998) 15

Glocker v. W.R. Grace & Co., 974 F.2d 540 (4th Cir. 1992) 8, 12

Govoni v. Bricklayers, Masons & Plasterers, 732 F.2d 250 (1st Cir. 1984) 8

Granfinanciera, S.A. v. Nordberg, 492 U.S. 33 (1989) 13

Gridley v. Cleveland Pneumatic Co., 924 F.2d 1310 (3rd Cir.), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1232 (1991) 8

Health Cost Controls v. Isbell, 139 F.3d 1070 (6th Cir. 1997) 10

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

Heidgerd v. Olin Corp., 906 F.2d 903 (2d Cir. 1990) 8

Hightshue v. AIG Life Insurance Co., 135 F.3d 1144 (7th Cir. 1998) 9

Hulcher v. United Behavioral Systems, Inc., 919 F.Supp. 879 (E.D. Va. 1995) 16

Marolt v. Alliant Techsystems, Inc., 146 F.3d 617 (8th Cir. 1998) 9

Martin v. Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Va., Inc., 115 F.3d 1201 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 118 S. Ct. 629 (1997) 9

McGee v. Equicor-Equitable HCA Corp., 953 F.2d 1192 (10th Cir. 1992) 8, 12

McKnight v. Southern Life And Health Insurance Co., 758 F.2d 1566 (11th Cir. 1985) 8

Porter v. Warner Holding Co., 328 U.S. 395 (1946) 15

Pratt v. Petroleum Product Management Employee Savings Plan, 920 F.2d 651 (10th Cir. 1990) 11, 14, 16

Schadler v. Anthem Life Insurance Co., 147 F.3d 388 (5th Cir. 1998) 9

Spacek v. Maritime Association, 134 F.3d 283 (5th Cir. 1998) 11

Sturges v. Hy-Vee Employee Benefit Plan and Trust, 991 F.2d 479 (8th Cir. 1993) 8, 12

Teamsters Local No. 391 v. Terry, 494 U.S. 558 (1990) 13, 15, 16

Tull v. United States, 481 U.S. 412 (1987) 13, 15

Vaughn v. Olsen Steel Co., Inc., 871 F.Supp. 247 (D.S.C. 1994) 14

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND STATUTES

U.S. Const. am. VII 13

28 U.S.C. § 1254(1) 1

28 U.S.C. § 1291 4

28 U.S.C. § 1331 4

29 U.S.C. § 1022 ..... 2, 12

29 U.S.C. § 1102 ..... 2, 12

29 U.S.C. § 1132 ..... 2, 4, 14, 15, 16

MISCELLANEOUS

Restatement (Second) of Trusts §§ 197-198 (1959) 16

George Lee Flint, Jr., ERISA: Jury Trial Mandated for Benefit Claims Actions, 25 Loy. L.A.L.Rev. 361 (1992) 16

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Mr. Mathews respectfully prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment and opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in order to: (1) resolve circuit court conflict and confusion regarding the rights of a participant in an ERISA plan, when the terms of the plan and SPD differ; and (2) resolve a conflict between the Seventh Circuit decision and relevant decisions of this Court regarding a plaintiff's Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial when monetary relief is sought.

OPINIONS BELOW

The Seventh Circuit opinion, 144 F.3d 461, is reprinted in the Appendix ("App.") at App. 1. The memorandum opinion and order of the district court, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9892 (N.D.Ill. July 7, 1997), is reprinted at App. 17.

JURISDICTION

The Seventh Circuit entered judgment on May 13, 1998, and entered an order denying rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc on June 26, 1998 (App. 27). This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND STATUTES INVOLVED

The Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution, and the applicable provisions of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) – 29 U.S.C. §§ 1102, 1022, 1132 – are reprinted in the Appendix (App. 31).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Background Facts

A. In Present-Valuing Lump Sum Retirement Distributions, Sears Used The Discount Rate Referred To In Summary Plan Descriptions Rather Than The Discount Rate Specified In The Plan.

The Sears Pension Plan is qualified under ERISA. It allows retirees to choose a lump sum distribution instead of an annuity. (App. 1). In order to compute the lump sum it is necessary to discount the annuity payments to present value by use of an interest rate. (App. 1-2). A higher discount rate results in a lower lump sum payment. (App. 2).

The Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. ("PBGC") publishes a discount rate monthly. Id. The Plan states it will present-value lump sum distributions by using the PBGC rate in effect "as of the date of distribution." Id. The "date of distribution" is the first day of the month immediately following retirement. Id. For example, Mr.

Mathews retired on May 15, 1991, so his date of distribution was June 1, 1991. Id.

Sears, however, did not use the PBGC rate in effect as of the first day of the month immediately following retirement to calculate lump sums. Id. Instead, it used the PBGC rate in effect on January 1 to compute all lump sums distributed during that year. Id. While contrary to the Plan language, the January 1 rate is referred to in the summary plan description ("SPD") that Sears made available to its employees. (App. 4). These summary documents, however, specifically state that the Plan, not the SPD, is the controlling document:

> Although this booklet highlights the main provisions of the Pension Plan, it is not a legal document. Complete details of the Plan can be found in the official Plan Document, which is the controlling instrument of the Plan in all cases.

App. 29-30 (Exhibit Z to Plaintiff's Supplemental Appendix to Motion for Summary Judgment).

The harm inflicted on Mr. Mathews and the class he represents by the use of the January 1 rate rather than the rate in effect on the date of distribution is easily shown. If the PBGC rate in effect on January 1 was higher than the rate in effect on the retiree's date of distribution, the retiree received a lower lump sum. (App. 2). Mr. Mathews' lump sum distribution was thus reduced by $17,324. Id. All class members similarly suffered a reduction in their lump sum distributions. Id.

At the end of 1994, in response to complaints from Sears' employees, Sears amended the Plan to make it consistent with the SPD. The Plan, like the SPD, now provides for the use of the PBGC rate in effect on January 1. (App. 4; R76, ¶24).

B. The District Court Proceedings.

In early 1995, Mr. Mathews brought suit to obtain the immediate and unconditional payment of the monies owed to him and the class under the terms of the Plan. (App. 17). Mr. Mathews also requested injunctive relief regarding the calculation and payment of future lump sum distributions, but Sears' 1994 amendment mooted this request. Mr. Mathews timely filed a jury demand on all matters triable as of right by a jury. The district court had jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and 29 U.S.C. § 1132 of ERISA.

The district court certified a class consisting of all the Sears retirees who would have received larger lump sums if Sears had used the PBGC discount rate in effect as of the date of their distribution (the Plan rate), rather than the January 1 rate (the SPD rate). (App. 2, 17). Sears never moved to strike Mr. Mathews' jury demand. The parties cross-moved for summary judgment. The district court granted summary judgment for defendants, finding that Sears' use of the SPD discount rate did not violate the Plan. (App. 26). The Seventh Circuit had jurisdiction over Mr. Mathews' appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

C. The Seventh Circuit Proceedings.

1. Although the Seventh Circuit found that "the language of the Sears Plan . . . is unambiguous in favor of the class," the court nonetheless held that Sears' use of the January 1 rate set forth in the SPD did not violate ERISA.

The Seventh Circuit acknowledged that Sears did not "follow[ ] the literal language of the plan" and that the use of the January 1 rate was "discrepant with [the plan] language." (App. 3). Indeed, the Seventh Circuit stated that interpreting the phrase "as of the date of the distribution" to mean the first day of the year seems to be "a bold, or even an outrageous, interpretation of the phrase." (App. 4).

The Seventh Circuit further held that the Plan language, on its face, is "unambiguous in favor of the class." (App. 7). Nevertheless, the appellate court affirmed summary judgment for Sears on two grounds.

First, purporting to apply the "extrinsic ambiguity doctrine," the Seventh Circuit held that the facially clear Plan language "as of the date of distribution" was really ambiguous, and might mean "the January 1 rate." (App. 12). To find this ambiguity, the Seventh Circuit relied upon three pieces of extrinsic evidence: (1) a Treasury Department regulation that had interpreted a statute (with similar "date of distribution" language to that found in the Plan) to permit the use of the PBGC rate as of either the date of distribution or the first day of the plan year; (2) the "course of dealing" between the class and Sears; and (3) the fact that the January 1 rate was set forth in the SPD. (App. 12). On this basis, the Seventh Circuit held the unambiguous Plan language to be ambiguous. For reasons explained below, the court then held that the Plan did not mean what it appeared to say. (App. 13).

Second, rejecting what the Seventh Circuit termed "another string to [Mr. Mathews'] bow," the court held that the Plan language need not be enforced in any event, because there was no evidence that any class member had relied on it. (App. 14). This followed, wrote the court, because strict adherence to the Plan language would result in a "windfall" to Mr. Mathews. (App. 15). This was true, reasoned the court, because Sears' use of the January 1 rate purportedly resulted in higher lump sum distributions to different Sears retirees (who are not members of the class) and Sears could not require those retirees to return those additional monies. Id.

2. The Seventh Circuit, sua sponte and without analysis, ruled that Mr. Mathews had no right to a jury trial of his ERISA breach of contract claim Having determined to look outside the Plan to interpret the meaning of the Plan's admittedly clear and unambiguous language, the Seventh Circuit held that "the finder of ultimate facts" must weigh the three pieces of extrinsic evidence referenced above against the clear Plan language (and presumably any extrinsic evidence favorable to plaintiff). (App. 12). The Seventh Circuit acknowledged that this would normally be a fact-finding function for the jury. (App. 12-13). However, the court held, sua sponte, that an ERISA plaintiff is never entitled to a jury trial and that the trial court would, therefore, sit as the finder of fact. (App. 13).

The court further held that remand for a bench trial was unnecessary because (the appellate court assumed) all the evidence was before the trial court on summary judgment, making it "an empty formality" to remand the matter to the trial judge as the finder of fact, since "the result would be foreordained." Id. The court so held even though it ruled inadmissible or "unbelievable" (App. 10) three of the six types of evidence tendered by Sears upon which the district court relied in making its decision. (App. 22-24).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I. The Seventh Circuit's Ruling Further Extends Circuit Court Conflict And Confusion Regarding The Treatment Of ERISA Claims Made Pursuant To The Terms Of An ERISA Plan When The Plan And SPD Conflict

The circuit courts have repeatedly addressed the issue of whether the plan document or an SPD controls when the two are in conflict. But, like the childhood game of "telephone," each iteration of the issue has only increased the doctrinal confusion. In the last two years, the confusion has compounded. Now is the time for this Court to intervene and provide certainty to plan participants and administrators on this important issue.

A. The circuit courts do not agree under what circumstances the plan or the SPD will control in the event their terms conflict

Some circuits hold that the only time an SPD controls over the terms of the ERISA plan is when the SPD's provisions are more favorable to the participants, and the participants (a) are attempting to recover under the more beneficial terms of the SPD; and (b) relied on those SPD terms. Govoni v. Bricklayers, Masons & Plasterers, 732 F.2d 250, 252 (1st Cir. 1984) (Breyer, J.); McKnight v. Southern Life And Health Insurance Co., 758 F.2d 1566, 1570 (11th Cir. 1985); Gridley v. Cleveland Pneumatic Co., 924 F.2d 1310, 1319 (3rd Cir.), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1232 (1991).

The Sixth Circuit disagrees, and elevates the SPD over the plan whenever it favors the participant, regardless of any showing of reliance on the SPD. Edwards v. State Farm Mutual Insurance Co., 851 F.2d 134, 136 (6th Cir. 1988). The Second Circuit holds that the SPD controls if it favors the participant, and has "express[ed] no view" as to whether a showing of reliance is necessary. Heidgerd v. Olin Corp., 906 F.2d 903, 909 (2d Cir. 1990).

Some circuit courts even allow the SPD to control when it favors the employer, rather than the participant. Contrary to the ruling in this case, however, those courts caution that the plan controls if the SPD contains a statement (as does the SPD here, see, e.g., App. 29-30) that the plan controls in the event of a conflict. Sturges v. Hy-Vee Employee Benefit Plan and Trust, 991 F.2d 479, 480 (8th Cir. 1993); Glocker v. W.R. Grace & Co., 974 F.2d 540, 542-3 (4th Cir. 1992); McGee v. Equicor-Equitable HCA Corp., 953 F.2d 1192, 1201 (10th Cir. 1992).

Recent decisions have done nothing to resolve the conflicts and confusion among the circuits. The Fourth Circuit holds that the plan controls, absent a showing of reliance by or prejudice to the participants. Martin v. Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Va., Inc., 115 F.3d 1201, 1204 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 118 S.Ct. 629 (1997) ("even if the participant never received the Plan, it will nonetheless control unless Mrs. Martin can show conflict between the Plan and the SPD and that she relied on or was prejudiced by the SPD."). The Tenth Circuit requires an enhanced showing of "some significant reliance" on the SPD. Chiles v. Ceridian, 95 F.3d 1505, 1519 (10th Cir. 1996). Before Mathews, the Seventh Circuit was in accord. Hightshue v. AIG Life Ins. Co., 135 F.3d 1144, 1149 (7th Cir. 1998) ("significant reliance" required). The Eighth Circuit differs, holding that the SPD controls in the event of a conflict with the plan; the only time a participant must show reliance on or prejudice from the SPD is if the SPD is "faulty." Marolt v. Alliant Techsystems, Inc., 146 F.3d 617, 621 (8th Cir. 1998). For its part, the Fifth Circuit holds that the SPD controls in the event of a conflict, but, like the Second Circuit, has reserved decision on whether the participant must show reliance. Schadler v. Anthem Life Ins. Co., 147 F.3d 388, 392, fn. 4 (5th Cir. 1998); Fallo v. Piccadilly Cafeterias, Inc., 141 F.3d 580, 583-4 (5th Cir. 1998). None of these cases, however, allow the employer to look to the SPD when the plan is more favorable to the participant.

B. The Seventh Circuit's opinion in Mathews adds to the confusion, and conflicts with the opinions of other circuit courts

In Mathews, the Seventh Circuit found that "[t]he language of the Sears Plan . . . is unambiguous in favor of the class." (App. 7). The court then looked to the SPD to determine whether the Plan meant something other than what it said. The court did so despite the fact that the SPD on which Sears relied specifically provides that the Plan, and not the SPD, controls in the event of an inconsistency. (App. 29-30).

That the Seventh Circuit used the "extrinsic ambiguity doctrine" as a means to look to the SPD compounds the conflict and confusion, for two reasons. First, no court has ever before employed the extrinsic ambiguity doctrine to construe an ERISA plan contrary to its plain meaning and to the detriment of the plan participants. Second, the Sixth Circuit has rejected the notion that "federal courts [may] apply common law theories to alter the express terms of written benefit plans." Health Cost Controls v. Isbell, 139 F.3d 1070, 1072 (6th Cir. 1997); cf., Cinelli v. Security Pacific Corp., 61 F.3d 1437, 1444 (9th Cir. 1995) ("We recognize that ERISA generally preempts the common law theories of contract law").

Further, the Seventh Circuit held that Mr. Mathews could not recover under the terms of the Plan because he failed to demonstrate reliance on those terms. To hold otherwise, wrote the court, would give Mr. Mathews a "windfall." Aside from the fact that this holding adds fuel to the inter-circuit conflict over the reliance issue, it also directly and irreconcilably conflicts with the Tenth Circuit's holding in Pratt v. Petroleum Product Management Employee Savings Plan, 920 F.2d 651, 662 (10th Cir. 1990).

In Pratt, the plaintiff sought recovery for breach of contract when his ERISA "top hat" pension plan refused to value his benefits in accordance with the terms of the plan. [ERISA affords less protection to "top hat" plan participants than the Plan here at issue. Spacek v. Maritime Association, 134 F.3d 283, 296 (5th Cir. 1998).] In finding for the plaintiff, the Tenth Circuit refused to require an ERISA participant to demonstrate reliance on the plan language in order to recover thereunder:

> In this case, we do not have a plaintiff relying upon a secondary plan document, a descriptive brochure. Rather, plaintiff merely is insisting that the terms of the original plan document be enforced. We will not require detrimental reliance before enforcing actual, express contractual provisions that admit only of a single interpretation.

Pratt, 920 F.2d at 662.

The Tenth Circuit likewise addressed and rejected a "windfall" argument akin to that raised by the Seventh Circuit in Mathews. The Tenth Circuit opined that Pratt must be paid in accordance with the terms of the plan even if "he would have received a windfall," and even if there was a "theoretically negative effect on other plan members." Id. Unlike the Seventh Circuit, the Tenth Circuit recognized that retirees are not fungible – the fact that Sears may have "overpaid" some of Mr. Mathews' co-workers by using the January 1 rate confers no benefit to Mr. Mathews as he attempts to live out his days on his lump sum distribution.

Finally, the Seventh Circuit completely ignored the caveat in the SPD (e.g., App. 29-30) that if the Plan and the SPD conflict, the Plan controls. By so doing, the Seventh Circuit is in direct conflict with the Eighth Circuit's opinion in Sturges, the Tenth Circuit's opinion in McGee, and the Fourth Circuit's opinion in Glocker. Further, the Seventh Circuit's holding makes no sense, since it ill-serves the purposes of ERISA to allow employers – who are obligated to write the plan and then provide its summary to participants – to follow a "summary" that incorrectly summarizes the plan. 29 U.S.C. § 1102 (App. 31); Curtis-Wright Corp. v. Schoonejongen, 514 U.S. 73, 83 (1995) (ERISA's writing requirement exists so that " 'every employee may, on examining the plan documents, determine exactly what his rights and obligations are under the plan' ") (cite omitted; emphasis in original); 29 U.S.C. § 1022 (SPD is intended to advise participants of "their rights and obligations under the plan"). (App. 31; emphasis added).

II. The Seventh Circuit's Holding That An ERISA Plaintiff Is Never Entitled To A Jury Trial Conflicts With This Court's Seventh Amendment Rulings

Although this Court has never directly addressed the issue of whether an ERISA plaintiff seeking the unconditional and immediate payment of money damages is entitled to a jury trial under the Seventh Amendment, this Court has provided a clear framework for determining the answer to that question. Specifically, this Court has held that a two-part inquiry is required: "[t]o determine whether a particular action will resolve legal [as opposed to equitable] rights, we examine both the nature of the issues involved and the remedy sought." Teamsters Local No. 391 v. Terry, 494 U.S. 558, 565 (1990); Tull v. United States, 481 U.S. 412, 417-18 (1987); Granfinanciera, S.A. v. Nordberg, 492 U.S. 33, 42 (1989). This Court has further held that the second part – "the remedy sought" – "is the more important." Teamsters v. Terry, 494 U.S. at 565. If, as here, both the nature of the issue and the remedy sought are "legal" (or if, as in Teamsters v. Terry, just the remedy sought is legal) then there is a constitutional right to a jury trial. Id., 494 U.S. at 573-74; U.S. Const. am. VII.

The Seventh Circuit, however, eschewed such an inquiry in Mathews, holding instead that in ERISA cases "there is no right to a jury trial" regardless of the remedy sought (App. 8), "the reason being that ERISA's antecedents are equitable." (App. 13). Unless the Seventh Circuit's erroneous legal conclusion is corrected, other circuits may follow its incorrect approach to the jury trial issue in ERISA cases, leading to further erosion of this Court's decisions. As the Court has repeatedly noted: "any seeming curtailment of the right to a jury trial should be scrutinized with the utmost care." Teamsters v. Terry, 494 U.S. at 565 (cites omitted).

A. The Tenth Circuit has described the nature of the issue here as a breach of contract

Under this Court's two-part Seventh Amendment inquiry, the first step is to determine the nature of the issue. " 'First, we compare the statutory action to 18th-century actions brought in the courts of law and equity.' " Teamsters v. Terry, 494 U.S. at 565, quoting Tull, 481 U.S. at 417-18. The Tenth Circuit did such a comparison in Adams

v. Cyprus Amax Minerals Company, 149 F.3d 1156 (10th Cir. 1998). The court determined, in accord with other circuits addressing the issue, that questions of eligibility to ERISA benefits are equitable in nature. Adams, 149 F.3d at 1161. However, in doing so, the court distinguished its earlier decision in Pratt, supra:

> the Pratt case involved the application of an unambiguous valuation procedure provided in the plan. An action by recognized beneficiaries to enforce unambiguous terms of a plan is more readily characterized as a breach of contract action than the more general eligibility claim raised here.

Adams, 149 F.3d at 1160 (cite omitted).

Thus, even though ERISA eligibility claims (like that in Adams) have been characterized as equitable, ERISA claims for breach of the unambiguous valuation procedures set forth in an ERISA plan (as here and in Pratt) are in the nature of an action at law for breach of contract. See Vaughn v. Owen Steel Co., Inc., 871 F.Supp. 247, 250-51 (D.S.C. 1994) (breach of contract action brought under ERISA must be tried to a jury; notes that the Supreme Court has "recast some ERISA claims as legal without expressly so holding"). Indeed, this characterization comports with the practice of many circuit courts to analogize a section 1132 action to one for breach of contract, and to borrow the statute of limitations from "state contract law to establish limitations periods for civil enforcement actions brought under 29 U.S.C. § 1132." Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Alabama v. Sanders, 138 F.3d 1347, 1357 fn. 9 (11th Cir. 1998) (collecting cases).

Accordingly, the result of the first inquiry militates in favor of Mr. Mathews' Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial. Teamsters v. Terry, 494 U.S. at 570 (breach of contract is "a legal issue").

B. This Court has repeatedly held that claims for monetary relief are legal

The Seventh Circuit likewise ignored the second (and most important) part of this Court's analysis: whether the nature of the remedy is legal or equitable. Mr. Mathews sought monetary relief pursuant to 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B), and this Court has "recognized the 'general rule' that monetary relief is legal." Feltner v. Columbia Pictures Television, Inc., ___ U.S. ___, 118 S.Ct. 1279, 1287 (1998); Teamsters v. Terry, 494 U.S. at 570. Although there are two exceptions to this general rule (i.e., where the damages are (1) restitutionary or (2) intertwined with injunctive relief), neither of those exceptions applies – or was found by the Seventh Circuit to apply – here.

First, Mr. Mathews' demand that he be paid the money owed him under the ERISA Plan is not "restitutionary" in nature, "as in action[s] for disgorgement of improper profits." Teamsters v. Terry, 494 U.S. at 570, quoting Tull, 481 U.S. at 424. In Tull, the Court held: "Restitution is limited to 'restoring the status quo and ordering the return of that which rightfully belongs to the purchaser or tenant.' " Id., quoting Porter v. Warner Holding Co., 328 U.S. 395, 402 (1946). Mr. Mathews does not seek the restoration of the status quo, nor is he asking for the return of monies (or things) that he previously had in his possession and that were taken from him; rather he seeks the unconditional and immediate payment of money pursuant to a contract right. See, Pratt, 920 F.2d at 658.

Second, the monetary relief Mr. Mathews seeks is not "incidental to or intertwined with injunctive relief." Teamsters v. Terry, 494 U.S. at 571. Unlike the plaintiffs in Adams, "the resolution of [Mr. Mathews'] claims for monetary relief [do not turn] on a determination of [his] eligibility under the plan." Adams, 149 F.3d at 1662. Thus, even under trust law, Mr. Mathews' right to unconditional and immediate payment would be deemed legal rather than equitable. Id. ("a beneficiary's remedy against a trustee is exclusively equitable unless the trustee has an immediate and unconditional duty to pay the beneficiaries"), citing the Restatement (Second) of Trusts §§ 197-198 (1959); see, e.g., Bower v. Bunker Hill Co., 114 F.R.D. 587, 598 fn. 6 (E.D. Wash. 1986).

In sum, unlike the many ERISA cases in which the right to a jury trial was denied, here there is no eligibility issue (and hence no equitable issue). Sears' only obligation was to properly calculate Mr. Mathews' lump sum distribution using the rate set forth in the Plan. Sears failed to do so, in breach of the pension agreement, and Mr. Mathews is entitled to monetary damages at law from the breach. Any issues of contract interpretation should therefore be tried before a jury. Hulcher v. United Behavioral Systems, Inc., 919 F.Supp. 879, 882 (E.D. Va. 1995) (joining "the developing trend in cases brought under ERISA § 1132(a)(1)(B) to permit a trial by jury"; collecting cases); George Lee Flint, Jr., ERISA: Jury Trial Mandated for Benefit Claims Actions, 25 Loy. L.A.L.Rev. 361 (1992) (advocating jury trials under contractual legal remedies theory).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the petition for writ of certiorari should be granted.

PAUL E. SLATER
Counsel of Record
BRUCE S. SPERLING
ROBERT D. CHEIFETZ
SPERLING, SLATER & SPITZ, P.C.
55 West Monroe, Suite 3300
Chicago, Illinois 60603
(312) 641-3200
Counsel for Petitioner

September 1998

APPENDIX

In the
United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

No. 97-2938

EDWARD H. MATHEWS, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated,

Plaintiff-Appellant,

v.

SEARS PENSION PLAN and SEARS, ROEBUCK & COMPANY,

Defendants-Appellees.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.
No. 95 C 1988 – Harry D. Leinenweber, Judge.

ARGUED FEBRUARY 25, 1998 – DECIDED MAY 13, 1998

Before POSNER, Chief Judge, and HARLINGTON WOOD, JR., and DIANE P. WOOD, Circuit Judges.

POSNER, Chief Judge. This is a class action under ERISA against Sears Roebuck's pension plan. It is brought on behalf of those employees of Sears who upon retiring received (between 1987 and 1994) a lump sum payout in lieu of an annuity. The determination of the lump sum required discounting to present value the future payments that the retiree would have received had he elected the annuity form of pension. Discounting requires the selection of a discount rate. The Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation recomputes the applicable rate every month. Sears' unvarying practice during the period covered by the suit was to use the rate fixed by the PBGC for January 1 of the year of retirement, even though the plan itself provides that the applicable rate is the PBGC rate that would be used "as of the date of distribution," which the plan defines as the first day of the month following retirement.

The named plaintiff retired on May 15, 1991, so his date of distribution was June 1, 1991. The PBGC discount rate for June was 6.75 percent. Sears, however, as usual used the January 1 rate, which was 7.25 percent, and as a result gave the plaintiff a smaller lump sum (by $17,324) than if it had used the rate applicable to the date of distribution. The reason it was smaller is that the higher the rate used to discount future payments to present value, the lower that present value will be. A discount rate is the interest rate at which a present lump sum would grow to equal specified future payments. That growth will be more rapid, and hence the starting point (the lump sum) smaller, the higher the rate. For example, the present value of an annuity of $10,000 a year for 20 years is $124,622 at 5 percent, but at 10 percent it is only $85,136.

The district court certified a class consisting of all the Sears retirees who in the period embraced by the complaint would have gotten larger lump sums had the PBGC discount rate applicable to their date of distribution been used instead of the January 1 rate. But the court then granted summary judgment for Sears on the ground that use of the January rate did not violate the plan.

There is no suggestion that by its choice of the January 1 PBGC rate rather than the rate on the date of distribution Sears was trying to rip off anyone. On the contrary, over the period covered by the complaint interest rates generally were rising and as a result tended to be lower at the beginning of a year than at the end. So the use of the January 1 rate gave most retirees who elected a lump sum a larger amount than if Sears had followed the literal language of the plan – for remember that the lower the interest rate, the higher the present value of a stream of future entitlements.

The origin of the plan's language that is in issue ("as of the date of distribution"), and of the practice discrepant with that language, are remote from anything to do with the plan sponsor's wanting to reduce the retirement benefits paid out under the plan. In 1984 Congress required pension plans covered by ERISA to use interest rates published by the PBGC in calculating lump sum payouts. (The law has since been changed – the statute now requires the use of the interest rate on 30-year Treasury bonds, 26 U.S.C. § 417(e)(3)(A)(ii)(II) – but the change does not affect this suit.) Specifically it required the plans to use the PBGC rate "as of the date of the distribution [i.e., payout]." 26 U.S.C. § 417(e)(3)(B). The following year, however, the Treasury Department issued a temporary regulation which stated that a plan could use either the date of distribution or the first day of the plan year in which the employee retired. Treas. Reg. § 1.417(e)-1T(e)(i). (In its final form, the regulation added that "the plan must provide which date is applicable." We consider the significance of this addition at the end of our opinion.) Although this may seem a bold, or even an outrageous, interpretation of the phrase "as of the date of the distribution," the validity of the regulation is not questioned.

At the time the temporary regulation was promulgated, Sears' pension plan provided that the January 1 rate would be used to calculate lump sum payouts. But because Sears (its people testified) wasn't certain that it wanted to continue using that date, it amended the plan, effective January 1, 1987, by replacing the January 1 rate with the language of section 417(e)(3)(B), thus creating the foundation for this lawsuit. Sears continued, however, without interruption or exception, to use the January 1 PBGC rate in calculating the lump sum payouts. And this method was clearly described in the summary plan documents furnished to all employees throughout the period. As far as appears, moreover, no one who retired during this period complained about the use of the January 1 rate.

At the end of 1994, Sears unilaterally amended the plan to reinsert January 1 in the place of the quotation from the statute. This action was possible because the plan allows Sears to amend the plan unilaterally, without consulting or getting the consent of any of the potential beneficiaries. And that is why the period covered by the suit ends on the last day of 1994. After that date, as until January 1, 1987 – the beginning of the complaint period – there was no possible argument that the plan required the use of a date different from January 1 of the year of retirement.

The parties agree that the ordinary principles of contract interpretation govern the interpretation of pension plans covered by ERISA. Cases can easily be cited for this proposition. See, e.g., Lynn v. CSX Transportation, Inc., 84 F.3d 970, 973 (7th Cir. 1996); Krawczyk v. Harnischfeger Corp., 41 F.3d 276, 279 (7th Cir. 1994); Burnham v. Guardian Life Ins. Co., 873 F.2d 486, 489 (1st Cir. 1989). But like so many legal generalizations, this one requires qualification to be completely accurate. First, when the fiduciary aspects of a plan are in issue, the relevant principles are those of the law of trusts rather than the law of contracts. See, e.g., Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Bruch, 489 U.S. 101, 110 (1989). Second, the relevant principles of contract interpretation are not those of any particular state's contract law, but rather are a body of federal common law tailored to the policies of ERISA. Santaella v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 123 F.3d 456, 461 (7th Cir. 1997); Swaback v. American Information Technologies Corp., 103 F.3d 535, 540 (7th Cir. 1996); Wegner v. Standard Ins. Co., 129 F.3d 814, 818 (5th Cir. 1997); Denzler v. Questech, Inc., 80 F.3d 97, 101 (4th Cir. 1996). And third, when a case involves ERISA pension plans rather than ERISA welfare plans, the interpretive principles are also to be tailored to the distinctive characteristics of pension plans. See Miller v. Taylor Insulation Co., 39 F.3d 755, 759 (7th Cir. 1994); Black v. TIC Investment Corp., 900 F.2d 112, 115 (7th Cir. 1990); Armistead v. Vernitron Corp., 944 F.2d 1287, 1299-1300 (6th Cir. 1991).

The third qualification is particularly important here. It is illustrated by the rule forbidding oral modifications of ERISA pension plans, Cefalu v. B.F. Goodrich Co., 871 F.2d 1290, 1295-97 (5th Cir. 1989), and cases cited there; see 29 U.S.C. § 1102(a)(1); cf. Doe v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield United of Wisconsin, 112 F.3d 869, 875-76 (7th Cir. 1997); Miller v. Taylor Insulation Co., supra, 39 F.3d at 759, a rule that is designed to protect the plan's solvency and that is not a part of the common law of contracts. E.g., Mohr v. Metro East Mfg. Co., 711 F.2d 69, 72 (7th Cir. 1983); Xerox Financial Services Life Ins. Co. v. High Plains Limited Partnership, 44 F.3d 1033, 1041 (1st Cir. 1995); 2 E. Allan Farnsworth, Farnsworth on Contracts § 7.6, p. 228 (1990).

A further illustration comes from the fact that pension plans are usually not negotiated. Although this is true of many other contracts as well (printed form contracts, sometimes called "contracts of adhesion," are as numerous as the grains of sand on a beach), the reservation in Sears' plan, a common reservation in such plans, of the right unilaterally to amend the plan underscores the degree to which this particular kind of contract goes beyond even "take it or leave it." The potential beneficiary, though not consulted or consenting, ordinarily is bound nevertheless by the amendment unless it violates a provision of ERISA, as by cutting down on his accrued rights under the plan (basically the value of his own monetary contributions). See 29 U.S.C. § 1054(g); see generally 1 Ronald J. Cooke, ERISA Practice and Procedure § 4:43, pp. 4-168 to 4-169 (2d ed. 1996).

Our third illustration of the need to tailor the federal common law of contracts to the special characteristics of ERISA plans is the principle that the plan summary generally controls in the case of a conflict with the plan itself because the summary is what the plan beneficiaries actually read. See, e.g., Fuller v. CBT Corp., 905 F.2d 1055, 1060 (7th Cir. 1990); Chiles v. Ceridian Corp., 95 F.3d 1505, 1518-19 (10th Cir. 1996); Jensen v. SIPCO, Inc., 38 F.3d 945, 952 (8th Cir. 1994); Hansen v. Continental Ins. Co., 940 F.2d 971, 981-83 (5th Cir. 1991); Edwards v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 851 F.2d 134, 136 (6th Cir. 1988). In the case of an ordinary contract, the full text would presumably trump a summary, and reliance on the summary would thus be thought unreasonable, though we cannot find a case directly on point. Cf. Abraham Zion Corp. v. Lebow, 761 F.2d 93, 103-04 (2d Cir. 1985); United Virginia Bank/National v. Best, 286 S.E.2d 221 (Va. 1982); Green River Valley Foundation, Inc. v. Foster, 473 P.2d 844, 847 (Wash. 1970); 2 Farnsworth, supra, § 7.10a, p. 260.

In short, while the starting point in resolving an issue of interpretation of an ERISA pension plan is the general law of contracts, the ending point may be different if the general law doesn't fit the issue because of something either in ERISA or in the nature of a pension plan. See Buckley Dement, Inc. v. Travelers Plan Administrators of Illinois, Inc., 39 F.3d 784, 789 (7th Cir. 1994); cf. Free v. Briody, 732 F.2d 1331, 1337-38 (7th Cir. 1984).

The language of the Sears plan as it read during the period covered by the complaint is unambiguous in favor of the class, and ordinarily that would be the end of the analysis of a contract case. If a written contract is clear, that is, if reading it one doesn't sense any ambiguity, gap, or contradiction that makes one doubt one's ability to understand the contract merely by reading it, the court normally won't look further for evidence of meaning. This is the venerable "four corners" rule. Its purpose is to protect contracting parties from the uncertainty that would attend their obligations if a judge or jury were free to consider evidence that would contradict the terms of a written contract. In re Envirodyne Industries, Inc., 29 F.3d 301, 305 (7th Cir. 1994); Continental Bank, N.A. v. Everett, 964 F.2d 701, 705 (7th Cir. 1992); McAbee Construction, Inc. v. United States, 97 F.3d 1431, 1435 (Fed. Cir. 1996). In such a regime all contracts would be revisable by judges and juries (in ERISA cases, just by judges, because there is no right to a jury trial in such a case, e.g., Brown v. Retirement Committee of the Briggs & Stratton Retirement Plan, 797 F.2d 521, 527 (7th Cir. 1986); Sullivan v. LTV Aerospace & Defense Co., 82 F.3d 1251, 1257-59 (2d Cir. 1996); 2 Cooke, supra, § 8:15, pp. 8-84 to 8-85). The security that one seeks from having a written statement of one's legal rights and duties would be destroyed.

In limited circumstances, however, parties are allowed to present extrinsic evidence to demonstrate that although the contract looks clear, anyone who understood the context of its creation would understand that it doesn't mean what it seems to mean. This is the doctrine of extrinsic ambiguity. Pierce v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry., 65 F.3d 562, 568 (7th Cir. 1995); Home Ins. Co. v. Chicago & Northwestern Transportation Co., 56 F.3d 763, 767-69 (7th Cir. 1995); Cole Taylor Bank v. Truck Ins. Exchange, 51 F.3d 736, 737-38 (7th Cir. 1995); AM Int'l, Inc. v. Graphic Management Associates, Inc., 44 F.3d 572, 577 (7th Cir. 1995). Properly limited, the doctrine fits single-employer ERISA pension plans, as has been held or assumed in cases in this and other circuits. Murphy v. Keystone Steel & Wire Co., 61 F.3d 560, 565 (7th Cir. 1995); Bolton v. Construction Laborers' Pension Trust, 56 F.3d 1055, 1059 n. 2 (9th Cir. 1995); Landro v. Glendenning Motorways, Inc., 625 F.2d 1344, 1352 (8th Cir. 1980); cf. Bidlack v. Wheelabrator Corp., 993 F.2d 603, 608 (7th Cir. 1993) (en banc) (plurality opinion); id. at 613 (concurring opinion). The qualifications "properly limited" and "single employer" must be emphasized. In Central States, Southeast & Southwest Areas Pension Fund v. Gerber Truck Service, Inc., 870 F.2d 1148 (7th Cir. 1989) (en banc), we refused to allow an employer by a secret side agreement to limit the contributions that he was required to make to a multiemployer plan under the terms of the plan. For by limiting his contributions he would be burdening the other employer participants in the plan and maybe even jeopardizing the plan's solvency. See also Dugan v. Smerwick Sewerage Co., No. 96-3618, 1998 WL 177958 (7th Cir. April 16, 1998); Black v. TIC Investment Corp., supra, 900 F.2d at 115. Our analysis was based on the provisions and policies of ERISA relating to multiemployer plans. The present case does not involve a multiemployer plan, and anyway the doctrine of extrinsic ambiguity is invoked here to limit rather than expand the plan's obligations.

The general limitations of the doctrine are at least as important in cases involving ERISA pension trusts as in cases involving normal contracts. The most fundamental of these limitations is that to be admissible to establish an ambiguity, extrinsic evidence must be objective; that is, it must not depend on the credibility of testimony (oral or written) of an interested party – either a party to the litigation or (a natural extension, though one we cannot find a case discussing) an agent or employee of the party. Unelko Corp. v. Prestone Products Corp., 116 F.3d 237, 241 (7th Cir. 1997); Pierce v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry., supra, 65 F.3d at 568; Home Ins. Co. v. Chicago & Northwestern Transportation Co., supra, 56 F.3d at 768-69; Cole Taylor Bank v. Truck Ins. Exchange, supra, 51 F.3d at 737;

AM Int'l, Inc. v. Graphic Management Associates, Inc., supra, 44 F.3d at 575-76. This limitation, without which it would be far too easy for a party to a contract to rewrite it in his favor after the fact, was violated in the two cases that the plaintiff cites to us, Central States, Southeast & Southwest Areas Pension Fund v. Central Cartage Co., 69 F.3d 1312 (7th Cir. 1995), and Central States, Southeast & Southwest Areas Pension Fund v. Joe McClelland, Inc., 23 F.3d 1256 (7th Cir. 1994), in which extrinsic evidence – in both cases oral and self-serving – offered to create an ambiguity in an ERISA pension plan was not allowed. Moreover, these cases involved multiemployer plans, like Gerber. See also Dugan v. Smerwick Sewerage Co., supra.

The limitation to objective evidence requires us to ignore three items of evidence tendered by Sears: testimony that the plan language was changed from January 1 to "date of distribution" because Sears hadn't made up its mind which date to use; testimony that the motivation for its deciding to stick with the January 1 rate was the cost of adapting Sears' data processing programs to enable Sears to change the interest rate used in its lump sum calculations monthly; and testimony that Sears understood the reference to "date of distribution" in the plan to mean January 1. An interested party may not by his oral testimony create an ambiguity in contractual language that seems clear. We add that the testimony that Sears could not have altered its programs to cope with a varying date is unbelievable, and at argument Sears' lawyer conceded that the plan could have hired out the relevant clerical tasks, albeit at some cost (of course).

But several other items of evidence were admissible to create an ambiguity because they do not require the trier of fact to credit oral testimony by an interested party. The first consists of the identity of language between the statute and the plan, together with the Treasury regulation that defines the statutory term "as of the date of the distribution" to mean (at the election of the pension plan) either on the actual date of distribution (that is, the date of payment of the lump sum to the retiring worker) or on January 1 of the plan year in which the distribution occurs. This convergence of statutory and regulatory language with plan language suggests that "date of distribution" as used in the plan is a term of art, that is, a term that has a technical legal meaning different from its ordinary meaning – a technical legal meaning that in this case encompasses the use of the January 1 rate. The statute and regulation are here being used as a kind of specialized dictionary to establish an objective meaning different from that in ordinary language. In re Envirodyne Industries, Inc., supra, 29 F.3d at 305.

Reinforcing this inference are the facts, also perfectly objective, that the summary plan documents consistently refer to the January 1 rate, that use of that rate was Sears' uniform practice, and that nobody complained during the period in which the critical language was in the plan. These items of evidence suggest that everyone concerned understood that the relevant date was January 1 even though the plan said "date of distribution." The second and third items constitute "course of dealing" evidence, conventionally admissible to show that a seemingly clear contractual provision is actually ambiguous, because the credibility of such evidence is not a function of the self-serving testimony of a party to the contract. In re New Valley Corp., 89 F.3d 143, 149-50 (3d Cir. 1996); Smart v.

Gillette Co. Long-Term Disability Plan, 70 F.3d 173, 179 (1st Cir. 1995); Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 212 comment b, § 223 comment b (1981); 2 Farnsworth on Contracts, supra, § 7.12a, pp. 279-80. As for the plan summary, it is written, unambiguous, a presumptively reliable guide to the contents of the plan itself, Fuller v. CBT Corp., supra, 905 F.2d at 1060; cf. Butler v. Encyclopedia Brittanica, Inc., 41 F.3d 285, 290-92 (7th Cir. 1994) – indeed a guide that would be given controlling weight if the shoe were on the other foot and the plaintiff were trying to use the summary as a more generous measure of his benefits than the plan and could show that he had reasonably relied on language in the summary that was inconsistent with the language of the plan. E.g., Fuller v. CBT Corp., supra, 905 F.2d at 1060.

In the usual suit on a written contract, there is no trial, because the only evidence is the contract itself. When as in this case there is extrinsic evidence of contractual meaning as well, but that evidence is not disputed in itself although the inferences to be drawn from it are, the only issue for trial is the ultimate issue of what the contract means. The extrinsic evidence here consists of the Treasury regulation, the course of dealing, and the contents of the plan summary. None of these pieces of evidence is disputable; the only question is whether when weighed with the language of the plan they show that the plan bears the meaning that Sears claims it bears. In a jury case, that would be a question for the jury, LaSalle National Trust, N.A. v. ECM Motor Co., 76 F.3d 140, 145 (7th Cir. 1996); In re Stoecker, 5 F.3d 1022, 1030 (7th Cir. 1993); Coplay Cement Co. v. Willis & Paul Group, 983 F.2d 1435, 1438 (7th Cir. 1993); Thomas v. Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers Union No. 433, 826 F.2d 755, 764 (8th Cir. 1987), for with immaterial exceptions the jury is the finder of ultimate facts (or, as they are sometimes called, "mixed questions of fact and law"), such as negligence, as well as of primary facts, such as how fast the defendant's car was going. E.g., Mucha v. King, 792 F.2d 602, 605 (7th Cir. 1986); Middleton v. Reynolds Metals Co., 963 F.2d 881, 884 (6th Cir. 1992); United States v. Rule Industries, Inc., 878 F.2d 535, 542 (1st Cir. 1989).

But because, as we said, there is no right to a jury trial in an ERISA case (the reason being that ERISA's antecedents are equitable, compare Feltner v. Columbia Pictures Television, Inc., 118 S. Ct. 1279 (1998)), and here no evidence besides that introduced at the summary judgment stage that the parties would be presenting at a trial, all the evidence bearing on the issue of contractual meaning was before the trier of fact at that stage. In these unusual circumstances, to remand the case for trial would be an empty formality; the result would be foreordained. 10A Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller, and Mary Kay Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2720, p. 26 (2d ed. 1983). Brotherhood Shipping Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 985 F.2d 323, 326-27 (7th Cir. 1993), is not to the contrary. That case stands for the sound proposition that the mere fact that a case is not a jury case doesn't entitle the judge to try the case on summary judgment. Anglo-American law disfavors trial by affidavit. But here the exact same evidence was before the district judge at the summary judgment stage, and in the exact same form, that it would be if we remanded for trial. We don't see how he could reach a different conclusion.

The plaintiff has another string to his bow, however. He argues – in a departure from the normal case, in which the plan beneficiary relies on the summary plan documents, which he read, rather than the plan itself, which beneficiaries rarely read – that Sears' workers should be entitled to rely on the language of the plan. He points out that it would be unrealistic to suppose that any member of the class was actually aware of the Treasury regulation that impressed on seemingly clear language an almost opposite meaning. And this is true. But he does not claim that he or any other member of the class actually relied on the language of the plan. Such a claim would be hard to take seriously. Workers rely on the summary plan documents, not on the bulky and legalistic plan itself.

We thus have the unusual case in which a contract says X but means Y; one party does not know why it means Y – is not privy to the evidence (or to all the evidence) that establishes the real meaning – but is told (here in the summary plan documents) that it is Y, and is content because the difference between X and Y is immaterial at the time that he becomes a party to the contract, since he doesn't know when exactly he's going to retire or what the annual pattern of PBGC discount rates will be in the year of his retirement. We find nothing in the principles of contract law or the policies of ERISA or the peculiarities of pension plans to bar the application of the doctrine of extrinsic ambiguity, properly limited as we have said, to show that Sears' interpretation is correct. We cannot see how ERISA beneficiaries or anyone else within the protective sweep of the statute would be benefited by the adoption of principles of contractual interpretation so rigid and archaic as to permit the class to reap the pure windfall here sought to the potential prejudice of other beneficiaries. It is a windfall not only because the members of the plaintiff class did not rely on the interpretation on which the suit is based, but also because there is no way that Sears can recoup the millions of dollars ($52 million to be precise) in extra benefits that it paid to other plan beneficiaries because of the interpretation that the class is challenging.

One loose end remains to be tied up. The Treasury regulation required Sears to indicate in the plan itself that it was going to use the January 1 rate, and Sears failed to do this. But this is not a suit to enforce the regulation; and in fact the Internal Revenue Service has not penalized Sears for its oversight. If the violation of the regulation were somehow a breach of contract, it would be a purely technical breach, entitling the victims only to nominal damages, since it did no harm. (Remember that the violation was just failing to amend the plan; the failure caused no harm to anyone, because no one relied on the language that Sears in violation of the regulation failed to change.) But we do not think it was any kind of breach. There is no suggestion that by failing to amend the plan – which remember that Sears could do without consulting or getting the consent of any of the potential beneficiaries – which eventually it did do without fuss – Sears was trying to deceive or otherwise take advantage of anyone. Although there was evidence that Sears was trying to preserve flexibility, which has overtones of opportunism summarized in the phrase "studied ambiguity," North Bank v. Cincinnati Ins. Cos., 125 F.3d 983, 986-87 (6th Cir.

1997) – of Sears trying to preserve a right to jump whichever way minimized plan benefits – the fact is that Sears adhered steadily to the January 1 rate and as a result lost millions of dollars over the course of the period covered by the complaint.

AFFIRMED.

A true Copy:
Teste:

/s/ _____
Clerk of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS
EASTERN DIVISION

EDWARD H. MATHEWS, Plaintiff,	)	No. 95 C 1988
v.	)	Judge Harry D. Leinenweber
SEARS PENSION PLAN and SEARS, ROEBUCK and CO.,	)	Magistrate Judge Keys
Defendant.	)

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

(Filed July 7, 1997)

On July 3, 1996, the court granted Edward H. Mathews' motion that he be appointed to represent a class of Sears' retirees defined as:

> All participants in the Sears Pension Plan who received a lump sum payout from January 1, 1987, through December 31, 1994, and whose payouts were calculated by using the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation ("PBGC") interest rate in effect on the first day of the Plan year, and for whom that rate was higher than the PBGC rate in effect on their respective dates of distribution.

He seeks on behalf of the class the difference between what the sum would have been had the lower rate been used. The present value of a future stream of income, such as is provided by an annuity, is greater at a lower interest rate and vice versa: the present value is lower if a higher interest rate is use [sic].

The facts are not seriously in dispute. Mathews was employed by Sears from August 20, 1954 until May 15, 1991, when the unit in which he was employed was closed. He was a participant in the Sears Pension Plan that was subject to ERISA. The plan provided that the participant could elect to receive his benefits either through a series of monthly payments or by accepting a payment of a single lump sum. Under the applicable statutes, rules and regulations the interest rate to be used was to be no higher than that announced by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, a government agency. The agency was directed to adjust the rate monthly to reflect changes in financial and annuity markets. The interest rates are published in the Federal Register on the 15th day of the month preceding the effective date of the new rate.

The Sears Plan specifies in § 7.8 as follows:

> In calculating the lump sum actuarial equivalent of any amount to be paid in a lump sum pursuant to 7.4, the interest rate to be employed will be:
>
> (ii) The interest rate . . . which would be used (as of the date of distribution) by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation for the purposes of determining present value of a lump sum distribution on plan termination.

Mathews received his lump sum distribution on June 24, 1991. The PBGC published interest rate in effect on June 1, 1991, was 6.75%. However Sears did not use this rate in calculating his lump sum distribution; it instead used the PBGC rate that was in effect on January 1, 1991, which was 7.25%. As a result, Mathews' lump sum distribution was $403,445.68 rather than the $420,770.64 it would have been had it been calculated at the lower interest rate. This was not an isolated example; Sears estimates that if the class is successful its liability would be in the neighborhood of $31 million. Over the years Sears has always used the PBGC rate in effect on the first of each year, a practice that ironically benefited more people than it hurt. Sears calculates that during the class period it paid out approximately $52 million more than it would have paid had the monthly rate been used.

Mathews' argument is straightforward: the plan unambiguously calls for use of the PBGC rate in effect on the date of the distribution which has to be the rate in effect at the start of the month of distribution. ERISA requires employee benefit plans to be in writing and its express terms control so as to insure that employees receive the benefits promised to them in writing. Schoonmaker v. Employee Savings Plan, 987 F.2d 410, 413 (7th Cir. 1993) Therefore, Sears had no choice but to use the monthly rate according to the clear plan language.

Sears, on the other hand, while conceding that Mathews' interpretation of the interest provision is reasonable, contends that the plan provision concerning interest rate is "extrinsically ambiguous." Since the plans [sic] is ambiguous, Sears, the plan administrator, was entitled to interpret it in a reasonable manner, as the Plan expressly authorized. Its decision to use the January 1 interest rate was not arbitrary and capricious.

An extrinsic ambiguity is present when, "although the agreement itself is a perfectly lucid and apparently a complete specimen of English prose, anyone familiar with the real-world context of the agreement would wonder what it meant with reference to the particular question that has arisen." Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. W.R. Grace & Co., 877 F.2d 614, 620 (7th Cir. 1989). Parol and other extrinsic evidence is admissible to demonstrate that the contract is, in fact, ambiguous or means something other than it appears to mean. Id. This doctrine is part of the federal common law, see AM Intern. v. Graphic Managment, Inc., 44 F.3d 572, 576 (7th Cir. 1995), and a variation of the doctrine of latent ambiguity has been applied in the ERISA context. Miller v. Taylor Insulation Co., 39 F.3d 755, 760 (7th Cir. 1994).

In order to maintain the protection of the written words of contracts and to protect the parties from the vagaries of judges and juries, i.e., to make it tougher to prove an extrinsic ambiguity, the law makes a distinction between what is referred to as "objective" and "subjective" evidence of ambiguity. AM Intern. at 575. "Objective" means evidence of ambiguity that can be supplied by a disinterested third party as opposed to "subjective" self-serving testimony and other evidence supplied by the parties themselves. It is a question of law whether an extrinsic ambiguity exists and its resolution is a question of fact. Id. With these principles in mind, the court will turn to the evidence the parties have submitted in support of their cross-motions for summary judgment.

In 1985, Sears adopted the language of § 7.8, effective, January 1, 1986, when it amended its plan to offer lump sum pension payments to many more Plan participants than had previously been eligible. It has from the very beginning, i.e., from January 1, 1986, used the PBGC rate that was in effect on January 1 of the year of the distribution. It has never used the rate in effect for the month in which the actual distribution is made. Sears contends that this was done out of necessity: due to the large number of pension payments it was required to make and the computer equipment that it then had, it was administratively impossible to use a monthly rate. Sears has annually advised its employees in the summary descriptions of the plan that it intended to use the PBGC January 1 rate for distributions during that year.

G. William Porter, an attorney with McDermott, Will, & Emery, Sears' attorneys for pension matters, and drafter of Section 7.8, testified by affidavit that he intended to give Sears "maximum flexibility" in selecting an interest rate for lump sum distributions. He therefore parroted the language of Section 417(e) of the Retirement Equity Act of 1984, which for the first time required the use of the PBGC rates for calculating lump sum pension benefits. Specifically, Section 417(e) of the Act provided that for purposes of calculating the present value of benefits a plan was required to use "an interest rate not greater than the interest rate which would be used (as of the date of distribution) by the [PBGC] for purposes of determining the present value of lump sum distributions on plan termination" – language virtually identical to that chosen by Parker for Section 7.8. The Sears Board of Directors adopted the amendment on November 9, 1985, to be effective January 1, 1986.

The previous July 19, 1985, a temporary Treasury regulation had been issued as a guide to interpret the new Section 417(e). It stated that a "plan must use an interest rate not greater than the rate used by the [PBGC] to value immediate annuities for plans terminating as of either (A) the proposed distribution . . . date or (B) the first day of the plan year that contains the proposed distribution . . . date (the "PBGC rate")." Temp. Treas. Reg. § 1.417(e)-IT(b)(2)(ii) (1985). Thus Porter had the benefit of the Treasury's interpretation of § 417(e).

Section 417(e) was itself amended by the Tax Reform Act of 1985. This statute used the term "applicable interest rate" for the first time but it was defined the same as before: "the interest rate which would be used (as of the date of distribution) by the [PBGC] for purposes of determining the present value of lump sum distribution on plan termination." Final Treasury regulations stated that either date could be used but that the "plan must provide which date is applicable." Treas. Reg. § 1.417(e)-1(d)(3).

On November 8, 1994, Sears adopted an amendment to its Plan, retroactive to January 1, 1985, specifically adopting as the applicable interest rate the PBGC rate "as of the first day of the Plan Year in which the participant's benefit commencement date. . . . " [sic] This amendment along with several others was approved by the Internal Revenue Service as complying with the relevant provisions of the Internal Revenue Code, qualifying the Plan for favorable tax treatment.[1]

Sears has produced affidavits from two of its employees in addition to Porter. Sears presents affidavits from Linda Zaccardi, Operations Manager for the Pension Plan, and Jane Tanquary, Plan Administrator. They state that Sears has consistently used the January 1 interest rate and identified it in the plan summaries which were annually given out to the employees. (Objective Fact). They also testified that due to computer limitations Sears was unable to use the monthly rate. Plaintiff does not dispute this in his 12(N) statement. Porter's testimony, on the other hand, is almost entirely subjective and consists of what he intended and why he drafted the plan language in the way he did.

---

[1] The applicability of this amendment to the case would appear to be foreclosed by the "anti-cutback" rules. See ERISA § 204(g); 29 U.S.C. § 1054g; 26 C.F.R. § 1.417(e)-1(d)(3)(iv); see also, Constantine v. TRW, 13 F.3d 969, 982 (6th Cir. 1994).

But Sears also produced affidavits from a variety of individuals who are (apparently) unaffiliated with it. (Objective Evidence). Theodore Rhodes, an attorney in private practice, and former attorney-advisor to the Department of Treasury Office of Tax Legislative Counsel, gave as his opinion that § 7.8 was ambiguous because the plan parroted the statute and the Treasury regulations interpreting the statute allowed either the January 1 rate or the monthly rate as alternative interest rates even though the statute appears to require the rate applicable during the month of distribution. Harry J. Conaway, an attorney and former lead Treasury Department attorney on the Retirement Equity Act of 1984 and Tax Reform Act of 1986, testified that the objective of the 1984 law was to protect employees from having their employers use an unrealistically high interest rate in computing lump sum distributions. He was a Treasury advisor to the Senate Committee that wrote the bill and it was its intent to allow either interest rate to be used. In discussions on drafting of proposed regulations, there was a disagreement among the Treasury Department employees whether either rate could be used or only the one in effect on the date of distribution. The Department decided that the statutory provision was ambiguous and the Department could exercise its authority to issue regulations to authorize the use of either rate. Ira Cohen, a former IRS employee and current principal with Price Waterhouse LLP specializing in pension matters, likewise opined that the § 7.8 and the 1984 statute were ambiguous for essentially the same reasons.

Arrayed against this evidence Mathews argues that the language of both the statute and § 7.8 are unamiguous, hence any Treasury regulation contravening the statute would not be valid and courts need not defer to it. Mathews also disagrees with Sears' interpretation of the Treasury Regulations and argues that the regulations themselves make it clear that, while the employer may select either date, it must designate which one it selects in the plan itself. The Sears Plan expressly adopts the interest rate in effect on distribution. He also submits certain documents from the PBGC to that effect.

It is clear to the court that Sears has produced some objective evidence that there was an ambiguity in the statute and therefore there was the same ambiguity in the Sears Plan. The language could well have been purposely adopted by Sears to create an ambiguity in its own plan to give it flexibility and a safe harbor. Sears, in fact, did lobby the Treasury Department to permit semi-annual changes in the PBGC rate.

The evidence produced by Sears is of the type described by the 7th Circuit that can be relied upon by the court in deciding whether or not an extrinsic ambiguity exists. If the term of the agreement appears "odd" in the real world, such oddness could be evidence of extrinsic ambiguity. Grace at 621. The affidavit of an officer of a non-party was considered to be objective evidence in Cole-Taylor Bank v. Truck Insurance Exchange, 51 F.3d 736, 740 (7th Cir. 1995). And evidence of a relevant custom and usage was suggested in AM Intern. at 577.

Accordingly, the court finds that the evidence does demonstrate that there was an extrinsic ambiguity in the contract. Having been given discretion to construe the terms of the plan, it was up to Sears, as the plan administrator, to interpret the interest provision reasonably. Sears could consider extrinsic evidence in doing so. DeValk Lincoln Mercury, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 811 F.2d 326, 332 (7th Cir. 1987). Just as in the case of a patent ambiguity, Sears' interpretation of plan terms that contain a latent ambiguity, will only be rejected by the court if arbitrary and capricious. See Bolton v. Construction Laborers' Pension Tr. for Southern Calif., 56 F.3d 1055, 1058 (9th Cir. 1995) (describing previous decision to remand case as "a determination that the Plan contained a latent ambiguity as to whether the break-in-service rule applied to involuntary breaks, and that the Pension Appeals Committee acted arbitrarily and capriciously in interpreting the rule.")

In the present case, Sears interpreted the provision as requiring application of the interest rate as of the beginning of the year of the lump sum distribution. This interpretation was not arbitrary. The language of the interest provision parroted that of Section 417(e), which had been interpreted to allow for use of either the rate applicable in the month of distribution or that applicable at the beginning of the year of distribution. Furthermore, the drafter of the plan testified that this language was used in anticipation of using the annual PBGC interest rate, while leaving the door open for use of a semi-annual rate once approved by the Treasury. Given the apparent difficulty administratively for Sears to use the monthly rate, the "unanticipated costs" associated with such an interpretation made use of the annual rate even more reasonable. See Krawczyk v. Harnischfeger Corp., 41 F.3d 276, 279 (7th Cir. 1994). Furthermore, Sears has consistently applied the annual rate to every lump sum payment it has made, making its decisions to use the annual rate less and less "arbitrary" as time progressed. Id. In addition, it is unlikely that plaintiffs could convincingly claim that they were surprised by Sears' interpretation where it had been disclosed in the summary descriptions of the plan during the relevant years. For all of the above reasons, the decision by Sears to use the annual PBGC rate was not arbitrary and capricious and will, accordingly, not be second-guessed by the court.

In conclusion, Mathews' motion for summary judgment is denied. Defendant Sears' motion for summary judgment is granted. Judgment entered in favor of Sears.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

/s/ Harry D. Leinenweber
Harry D. Leinenweber, Judge
United States District Court

Dated: July 7, 1997

United States Court of Appeals

For the Seventh Circuit

Chicago, Illinois 60604

June 26, 1998

Before

Hon. Richard A. Posner, Chief Judge
Hon. Harlington Wood, Jr., Circuit Judge
Hon. Diane P. Wood, Circuit Judge

EDWARD H. MATHEWS, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated,	)	Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.
Plaintiff-Appellant,	)	No. 95 C 1988
No. 97-2938 v.	)	Harry D. Leinenweber, Judge.
SEARS PENSION PLAN and SEARS, ROEBUCK & COMPANY,	)
Defendants-Appellees.	)

ORDER

On May 27, 1998, plaintiff-appellant filed a petition for rehearing with suggestion for rehearing en banc and on June 12, 1998, defendants-appellees filed a [sic] answer. All the judges on the original panel have voted to deny the petition, and none of the active judges* has requested a vote on the suggestion for rehearing en banc. The petition is therefore DENIED.

---

* Hon. Joel M. Flaum did not participate in the consideration of the petition.

App. 28

Sears

Pension Plan

CHECKLIST

A SUMMARY PLAN DESCRIPTION

A00551

introduction

The Sears Pension Plan covers all eligible Checklist and Timecard employes.

The purpose of this booklet is to enable you and your family to understand and evaluate the major provisions of the amended Sears Pension Plan. You should read the booklet carefully because it describes such important Plan elements as when you qualify for a pension, how that pension is determined, and what kind of survivor benefits are available for your spouse or other beneficiary.

In addition, it tells how the Pension Plan works together with your Savings and Profit Sharing Fund, Social Security benefits, and your own savings and investments to provide the unique four-part package which comprises your retirement program. For a fuller understanding of this program you should also read the Company's most recent booklet on the Savings and Profit Sharing Fund (The Savings and Profit Sharing Fund of Sears Employes [sic], A Summary Plan Description) and the government's most recent edition of its pamphlet on Social Security benefits.

The Profit Sharing booklet is available from your local Personnel Office and the Social Security pamphlet can be obtained by writing the Social Security Administration, P.O. Box 57, Baltimore, Maryland 21203.

All three booklets should be kept handy for future reference because someday your retirement program will be as important to you as your paycheck is now.

Although this booklet highlights the main provisions of the Pension Plan, it is not a legal document. Complete details of the Plan can be found in the official Plan Document, which is the controlling instrument of the Plan in all cases. You may examine, or obtain a copy of, this Document in accordance with the procedures described on page 43.

why a retirement program?

For some Sears employes [sic], retirement may seem a long way off; for others, it may be only a few years away. Regardless of age, however, we all want to prepare as carefully as possible for a comfortable retirement. No one wants to worry about financial security during the leisure years. Yet, it's often difficult for the individual to provide this security entirely on his or her own.

All too often, retirement conjures up an image of financial belt-tightening instead of financial security. However, as a Sears employe [sic], you can look forward to a guaranteed income in your retirement years, thanks to the comprehensive retirement program that Sears has developed for you.

A00554

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND STATUTES INVOLVED

U.S. Const. amend. VII.

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

29 U.S.C. § 1102. Establishment of plan

(a) Named Fiduciaries

(1) Every employee benefit plan shall be established and maintained pursuant to a written instrument. Such instrument shall provide for one or more named fiduciaries who jointly or severally shall have authority to control and manage the operation and administration of the plan.

29 U.S.C. § 1022. Summary plan description

(a) A summary plan description of any employee benefit plan shall be furnished to participants and beneficiaries as provided in section 1024(b) of this title. The summary plan description shall include the information described in subsection (b) of this section, shall be written in a manner calculated to be understood by the average plan participant, and shall be sufficiently accurate and comprehensive to reasonably apprise such participants and beneficiaries of their rights and obligations under the plan. A summary of any material modification in the terms of the plan and any change in the information required under subsection (b) of this section shall be written in a manner calculated to be understood by the average plan participant and shall be furnished in accordance with section 1024(b)(1) of this title.

29 U.S.C. § 1132. Civil enforcement

(a) Persons empowered to bring a civil action

A civil action may be brought –

(1) by a participant or beneficiary –

(A) for the relief provided for in subsection (c) of this section, or

(B) to recover benefits due to him under the terms of his plan, to enforce his rights under the terms of the plan, or to clarify his rights to future benefits under the terms of the plan;

---

(2)

FILED
NOV 13 1998
OFFICE OF THE CLERK
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

No. 98-505

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1998

EDWARD H. MATHEWS, Petitioner,

v.

SEARS PENSION PLAN AND SEARS, ROEBUCK AND CO., Respondents.

On Petition For Writ Of Certiorari To The United States Court Of Appeals For The Seventh Circuit

BRIEF FOR RESPONDENTS IN OPPOSITION

WILLIAM A. GORDON
Counsel of Record
GARY A. ISAAC
CHARLES F. REGAN, JR.
ROBERT M. DOW, JR.
Mayer, Brown & Platt
190 South LaSalle Street
Chicago, Illinois 60603
(312) 782-0600

Counsel for Respondents

43 pp

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Was the Seventh Circuit correct in upholding the Plan Administrator's interpretation of Section 7.8 of the Sears Pension Plan, as it existed between 1987 and 1994, in light of the undisputed, objective evidence, including (a) the contemporaneous interpretation in Treasury Department Regulations of an Internal Revenue Code provision which was adopted verbatim in Section 7.8 of the Plan, (b) a uniform course of dealing followed by all parties during the relevant period, and (c) an unbroken record of disclosure in Plan summaries distributed to participants?

2. Was the Seventh Circuit correct in holding, in accord with the nine other circuits that have addressed the issue, that a disappointed recipient of pension benefits is not entitled to a jury trial of his claim for additional benefits brought under Section 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA, when his claim is dependent upon an interpretation of pension plan language, particularly where the Plan Administrator has been expressly granted discretion to interpret the Plan and remedy ambiguities in it?

RULE 29.6 STATEMENT

Sears Pension Plan, the first Respondent, does not have a parent corporation or any subsidiaries.

The second Respondent, whose correct name is Sears, Roebuck and Co., has no parent corporation. Its non-wholly owned subsidiaries are as follows:

713949 Ontario Limited (Canada)
Carrefour Richelieu Realties Ltd. (Canada)
Carrefour Richelieu Realties
(Carrefour Angrignon) Ltd. (Canada)
Carrefour Richelieu Realties
(Drummondville) Ltd. (Canada)
Carrefour Richelieu Realties
(Pierre Caisse) Ltd. (Canada)
Carrefour Richelieu Realties
(Place Angrignon) Ltd. (Canada)
Carrefour Richelieu Realties
(Sorel) Ltd. (Canada)
Carrefour Richelieu Realties
(St. Jean) Ltd. (Canada)
Carrefour Richelieu Realties
(St. Jerome) Ltd. (Canada)
Chatham Centre Mall Limited (Canada)
Harold Williams (1964) Limited (Canada)
Heritage Place Shopping Centre Limited (Canada)
Kelfor Holdings Limited (Canada)
Kildonan Place Shopping Centres Limited (Canada)
La Grande Place Des Bois - Francs Inc. (Canada)
Les Galeries de Hull Ltd. (Canada)
Les Rivieres Shopping Centre Ltd. (Canada)
MESBIC Ventures Holding Company
Mimtex (Colombia)
Mintoy (Colombia)
Place Beauport Properties Ltd. (Canada)

Place Vertu Properties Ltd. (Canada)
Sears, Roebuck de Mexico, S.A. de C.V. (Mexico)
Wilshire Landmark I

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

QUESTIONS PRESENTED i

RULE 29.6 STATEMENT ii

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iv

OPINIONS BELOW 1

STATEMENT 1

A. Background Facts 2

B. The District Court Decision 3

C. The Seventh Circuit Decision 4

D. Petitioner's Request for Rehearing 6

REASONS FOR DENYING THE PETITION 7

I. THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT'S CONSIDERATION OF OBJECTIVE EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE TO INTERPRET SECTION 7.8 OF THE SEARS PLAN DOES NOT CONFLICT WITH DECISIONS OF THIS COURT OR THE LAW IN ANY OTHER CIRCUIT 8

A. Neither The Seventh Circuit Nor The District Court Found Any Conflict Between Section 7.8 Of The Sears Plan And The Summary Plan Documents 9

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

B. The Seventh Circuit's Application Of Federal Common Law Principles To Interpret Section 7.8 Of The Sears Plan Was Entirely Consistent With Prior Decisions Of This Court And Of Other Circuits 13

II. THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT'S TREATMENT OF THE JURY TRIAL ISSUE DOES NOT CONFLICT WITH DECISIONS OF THIS COURT OR THE LAW IN ANY OTHER CIRCUIT 16

A. All Ten Circuits To Have Addressed The Issue Have Agreed That No Right To Jury Trial Exists For Benefits Claims Under Section 502(a)(1)(B) Of ERISA 16

B. Petitioner's Seventh Amendment Argument Rests On Mischaracterizations Of The Facts And Law 20

1. This Case Is Not Analogous To A Breach Of Contract Claim 21

2. Petitioner's Suit Is Not An Action For "Money Damages," But Rather Is An Equitable Action For Benefits Under Section 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA 23

3. This Case Plainly Involves An Eligibility Issue, And Thus Is Equitable 25

CONCLUSION 27

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases: Page

Adams v. Cyprus Amax Minerals Co., 149 F.3d 1156 (10th Cir. 1998) 17, 19, 21, 22, 23, 25

Berry v. Ciba-Geigy Corp., 761 F.2d 1003 (4th Cir. 1985) 18

Blake v. Unionmutual Stock Life Ins. Co., 906 F.2d 1525 (11th Cir. 1990) 24

Blau v. Del Monte Corp., 748 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1984) 18

Bolton v. Construction Laborers' Pension Trust, 56 F.3d 1055 (9th Cir. 1995) 14

Borst v. Chevron Corp., 36 F.3d 1308 (5th Cir. 1994) 18

Bugher v. Feightner, 722 F.2d 1356 (7th Cir. 1983) 18

Chauffeurs, Teamsters & Helpers, Local No. 391 v. Terry, 494 U.S. 558 (1990) 17, 18, 20

Cinelli v. Security Pacific Corp., 61 F.3d 1437 (9th Cir. 1995) 14, 15

Cox v. Keystone Carbon Co., 894 F.2d 647 (3d Cir. 1990) 17, 19

DeFelice v. American Int'l Life Assurance Co., 112 F.3d 61 (2d Cir. 1997) 17, 18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Bruch, 489 U.S. 101 (1989) 13, 19, 20

Franchise Tax Board v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1 (1983) 13

Glocker v. W.R. Grace & Co., 974 F.2d 540 (4th Cir. 1992) 11

Granfinanciera, S.A. v. Nordberg, 492 U.S. 33 (1989) 17, 18, 20

Health Cost Controls v. Isbell, 139 F.3d 1070 (6th Cir. 1997) 15

Hunt v. Hawthorne Associates, Inc., 119 F.3d 888 (11th Cir. 1997), cert. denied, 118 S. Ct. 1800 (1998) 17, 19, 24, 26

Landro v. Glendenning Motorways, Inc., 625 F.2d 1344 (8th Cir. 1980) 14

Marolt v. Alliance Techsystems, Inc., 146 F.3d 617 (8th Cir. 1998) 11

Miller v. Taylor Insulation Co., 39 F.3d 755 (7th Cir. 1994) 14

New Valley Corp., In re, 89 F.3d 143 (3d Cir. 1996) 14

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Pilot Life Ins. Co. v. Dedeaux, 481 U.S. 41 (1987) 13

Pratt v. Petroleum Product Management Employee Savings Plan, 920 F.2d 651 (10th Cir. 1990) 15, 16, 21, 22

Smart v. Gillette Co. Long-Term Disability Plan, 70 F.3d 173 (1st Cir. 1995) 14

Spinelli v. Gaughan, 12 F.3d 853 (9th Cir. 1993) . . 18

Sullivan v. LTV Aerospace & Defense Co., 82 F.3d 1251 (2d Cir. 1996) 17, 19

Tull v. United States, 481 U.S. 412 (1987) 17, 18, 19, 20, 23

Turner v. CF&I Steel Corp., 770 F.2d 43 (3d Cir. 1985) 18

Vorpahl, In re, 695 F.2d 318 (8th Cir. 1982) 18

Wilkins v. Baptist Healthcare System, 150 F.3d 609 (6th Cir. 1998) 18

Wardle v. Central States, Southeast & Southwest Areas Pension Fund, 627 F.2d 820 (7th Cir. 1980) 19, 20

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Statutes, Regulations, and Rules:

26 U.S.C. § 417(e)(3) 2, 3, 4, 8, 16

26 U.S.C.A. § 417, Historical and Statutory Notes (West Supp. 1997) 3

Employment Retirement Income Security Act section 502(a)(1)(B), 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B) . . . . . passim

Treas. Reg. § 1.417(e)-1T(b)(2)(ii) 2

Treas. Reg. § 1.417(e)-1T(e)(1) 2

Seventh Circuit Rule 40(e) 14

Miscellaneous:

2 Ronald J. Cooke, ERISA Practice and Procedure § 8.15 (2d ed. 1996) 24

Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 197 (1959) 25

Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 198 (1959) 25

BRIEF FOR RESPONDENTS IN OPPOSITION

Respondents, Sears Pension Plan and Sears, Roebuck and Co. (collectively "Sears"), respectfully request that this Court deny the petition for writ of certiorari, which seeks review of the unanimous judgment and opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

OPINIONS BELOW

The Memorandum Opinion and Order of the district court, granting summary judgment for Sears, is reported at 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9892 (N.D. Ill. July 7, 1997), and is reprinted in the Appendix to the Petition ("Pet. App.") at Pet. App. 17. The May 13, 1998, Opinion of the Seventh Circuit, affirming the judgment of the district court, is reported at 144 F.3d 461, and is reprinted at Pet. App. 1. The June 26, 1998, Order denying Petitioner's request for rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc is unreported and is reprinted at Pet. App. 27.

STATEMENT

This case presents a fact-driven question of ERISA plan interpretation, and is thus particularly ill-suited for review by this Court. All that is at issue is the meaning of specific language in one section of one plan in light of the factual circumstances surrounding its adoption and implementation. That is, the courts below were asked to determine whether the language of Section 7.8 of the Sears Pension Plan ("the Plan"), as it existed between 1987 and 1994, required Sears to use the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation ("PBGC") discount interest rate in effect during the month that a lump sum pension payment was calculated, or whether that language, when read in context, permitted Sears to use the interest rate established by the PBGC on January 1 of each relevant year. After detailed review of the undisputed objective evidence, both the district court and the Seventh Circuit approved Sears' interpretation.

A. Background Facts.

In 1984, Congress required for the first time, in Section 417(e)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, that pension plans covered by ERISA use interest rates published by the PBGC when calculating lump sum payouts. Pet. App. 3. Specifically, Section 417(e)(3) provided that to calculate lump sums, a plan was to use

> "the interest rate which would be used (as of the date of the distribution) by the [PBGC] for purposes of determining the present value of a lump sum distribution on plan termination."

The following year, the Treasury Department issued a Regulation which specifically interpreted the new Section 417(e)(3) as authorizing plans to utilize either of two alternative PBGC rates when calculating lump sum payouts: that in effect on the first day of the plan year in which payment was to be made (the "January 1" rate), or that effective during the month of the payout (the "monthly" rate). Treas. Reg. § 1.417(e)-1T(b)(2)(ii), § 1.417(e)-1T(e)(1); Pet. App. 3; Respondents' Appendix ("Resp. App.") 1a.

In response to this regulatory interpretation, Sears amended its Plan, effective January 1, 1987, by adopting the language of Section 417(e)(3) word-for-word in Plan Section 7.8. Pet. App. 4; Resp. App. 3a. Thereafter, without interruption or exception, Sears used the permitted January 1 rate for eight years when calculating lump sum payments. Pet. App. 4. As the Seventh Circuit noted, there is no suggestion that Sears chose the January 1 rate "to reduce the retirement benefits paid out under the Plan." Id. at 3. Rather, by "adher[ing] steadily" to the January 1 rate when making lump sum payments (id. at 16), Sears actually paid out approximately $52 million more to retirees than it would have if the monthly rate had been used. Id. at 15, 16, 19.

Moreover, throughout this same period, the Plan consistently and without deviation advised participants, in the summary plan documents distributed to all employees, that it was using the January 1 PBGC rate to calculate lump sums. Pet. App. 4, 11. No one who retired during the relevant period complained about the use of the January 1 rate. Ibid.

Both the Plan language at issue, and that portion of Section 417(e)(3) of the Code upon which it was based, were amended for plan years after 1994. Neither remains in effect. See 26 U.S.C.A. § 417, Historical and Statutory Notes (West Supp. 1997).

B. The District Court Decision.

In early 1995, Petitioner Edward Mathews brought suit to recover the difference between the lump sum he received in 1991 and the amount he would have been paid if the monthly PBGC interest rate had been used to calculate his payout. Pet. App. 17. Because a higher interest rate results in a lower lump sum, and rates happened to decline during 1991, Mr. Mathews was given a $403,446 lump sum, rather than the $420,771 payout he would have received if the monthly rate had been used. Id. at 18-19.

Thereafter, on Petitioner's motion, the district court certified a class consisting of all Sears retirees who, in the period embraced by the Complaint — from January 1, 1987, through December 31, 1994 — would have received a larger lump sum payment had the monthly interest rate been used instead of the January 1 rate. Excluded from the class were those retirees who benefitted from the Plan's use of the January 1 rate, that is, those who retired when the monthly rate happened to be higher than the January 1 rate.

With the sole question being the interpretation of Plan language, and there being no serious dispute as to the facts (Pet. App. 18), the parties submitted the matter to the court by filing cross-motions for summary judgment.

The district court first reviewed what it considered the uncontested "objective evidence," including, inter alia, (i) the contemporaneous interpretation by the Treasury Department of Section 417(e)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, which was adopted verbatim in Section 7.8 of the Plan (Pet. App. 25), (ii) Sears' consistent and uninterrupted use of the January 1 interest rate (id. at 23), and (iii) the Plan summaries which uniformly identified use of the January 1 rate, and were distributed annually to employees. Ibid. Based on that evidence, the district court held that Section 7.8, like the statute it parroted, authorized use of the January 1 rate (id. at 24), and granted summary judgment for Sears. That is, because the Plan Administrator had been given "sole discretion" to construe the terms of the Plan and to "remedy ambiguities" in it (Resp. App. 5a), the court held that Sears' decision to use the January 1 PBGC rate was neither arbitrary nor capricious — the standard of review when Plan language grants discretion to the administrator — and would "not be second-guessed by the Court." Pet. App. 25, 26.

C. The Seventh Circuit Decision.

On appeal, the Seventh Circuit affirmed. In so doing, Chief Judge Posner, writing for a unanimous court, undertook a careful review of the Plan language at issue. And, like the district court, the Seventh Circuit concluded that that language, properly understood in light of the objective and undisputed extrinsic evidence, could appropriately be read to permit use of the January 1 PBGC interest rate.

First, and foremost, the court of appeals looked to the "identity of language between the statute [Section 417(e)(3)] and the plan," together with the Treasury Regulation which had interpreted that language to encompass either the January 1 or the monthly interest rate. Pet. App. 11. "This convergence of statutory and regulatory language with plan language," the court held, suggested that Section 7.8 had a "technical legal meaning different from its ordinary meaning." Thus, the court concluded, the statute, and the regulation interpreting it, should be used as a "specialized dictionary" to establish the objective meaning of identical language in the Plan. Ibid.

Then, the court of appeals "reinforced" this finding with other objective facts. For example, the court found an undisputed "course of dealing" from the fact that Sears "uniform[ly]" used the January 1 rate throughout the class period, and that "nobody complained during the period in which the critical language was in the plan." Pet. App. 11.

And, finally, the Seventh Circuit found that the written Plan summaries, which consistently advised all employees that the January 1 rate was being used, provided "a presumptively reliable guide to the contents of the plan itself." Pet. App. 12. In considering this final factor, the court did not address, much less resolve, a "conflict" between the terms of the Plan and the summary plan description. Rather, contrary to Petitioner's primary argument here, the court simply concluded that the summary plan description provided supplemental support for, and, indeed, confirmed, the conclusion that the Plan language itself, properly understood in the light of other objective extrinsic evidence, permitted use of the January 1 rate. In fact, the court went out of its way to note that the Plan summary "would be given controlling weight" if the Petitioner were relying on it to increase his benefits, thereby clearly indicating that it was not being given such weight here. Ibid.

Nor did the court hold, as Petitioner suggests, that the Plan language need not be enforced "because" class members did not rely on it. See Pet. 6. Rather, in response to Petitioner's argument that an employee would not be aware of the Treasury Regulation defining the language adopted in the Plan, the court simply observed that such an employee would not have read the language in the first instance. Pet. App. 14.

Thus, in rejecting Petitioner's after-the-fact interpretation, the Seventh Circuit recognized that, for eight years, no one intended the language of Section 7.8 to require Sears to choose the monthly discount rate, and no one understood that Sears was doing so. Pet. App. 4.

D. Petitioner's Request for Rehearing.

In the wake of the Seventh Circuit's unanimous affirmance, Petitioner sought rehearing, with a suggestion of rehearing en banc. This time, Petitioner argued that the court's ruling was contrary to Seventh Circuit authority which, he contended, prohibited use of a summary plan description to override the plain meaning of a plan. In response, Sears noted that the Seventh Circuit panel here had not relied on summary plan documents to contradict or override terms in the Plan, but, rather, had merely cited them as extrinsic evidence "reinforcing" the court's interpretation of the Plan's language. Pet. App. 11, 12.

Second, Petitioner argued for the first time that he had been deprived of his right to a jury trial. In advancing this position, Petitioner ignored the fact that all ten circuit courts of appeals to have addressed the issue have uniformly concluded that suits for pension benefits by disappointed applicants are inherently equitable. Moreover, the Petitioner failed to address the circuit court decisions recognizing that jury trials are incompatible with the arbitrary and capricious standard applicable to plan administrators, who, as here, have been granted discretionary authority to interpret plans and remedy ambiguities.

On June 26, 1998, the Petition for Rehearing was denied. All of the judges on the original panel voted to deny, and none of the active judges on the Seventh Circuit requested a vote on the suggestion for rehearing en banc. Pet. App. 27.

REASONS FOR DENYING THE PETITION

Petitioner offers two arguments why this Court should review the Seventh Circuit's unanimous decision in favor of Sears in this case. Neither stands up to scrutiny.

First, Petitioner argues that the Court should grant certiorari to resolve "confusion" among the circuits as to whether a plan document or a summary plan description ("SPD") controls when the two conflict. But that issue is not presented by this case. The Seventh Circuit did not even find such a "conflict" between the Sears Plan and the summary plan documents, much less hold that Sears is entitled to summary judgment because the SPD "controls." Rather, the Seventh Circuit held that the undisputed and objective extrinsic evidence — particularly the Treasury Regulations interpreting the Internal Revenue Code provision tracked verbatim by Section 7.8 of the Plan — demonstrated that the Plan itself permitted use of the January 1 interest rate when calculating lump sum payouts. The court cited the undisputed fact that the written Plan summaries consistently advised Sears' employees that the January 1 rate was being used as one of several additional items of objective evidence that "reinforced" this interpretation of Section 7.8. Thus, even if the circuits were divided about whether a plan document or a summary plan description "controls" in the event of a conflict, there is no basis whatsoever for a grant of certiorari in this particular case.

Second, Petitioner argues that the Court should grant certiorari because the Seventh Circuit's decision deprived him of a jury trial. However, the Seventh Circuit's conclusion that Petitioner was not entitled to a jury trial in this case is not in conflict with any decisions of this Court or with the law in any other circuit. Indeed, ten circuits have now addressed this issue, and all ten have held that no right to jury trial exists for benefits claims under Section 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA. The courts of appeals have repeatedly held that even where an ERISA plaintiff casts his claim as one for breach of contract for money damages, cases brought under Section 502(a)(1)(B) are inherently equitable, both in nature and with respect to the remedy sought, when the claim is dependent upon an interpretation of pension plan language. Moreover, a jury trial is particularly inappropriate where, as here, the Plan Administrator's interpretation is subject to an "arbitrary and capricious" standard of review because the Administrator has been granted discretion to construe the plan.

I. THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT'S CONSIDERATION OF OBJECTIVE EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE TO INTERPRET SECTION 7.8 OF THE SEARS PLAN DOES NOT CONFLICT WITH DECISIONS OF THIS COURT OR THE LAW IN ANY OTHER CIRCUIT.

As noted above, this lawsuit arises out of a dispute over the meaning of Section 7.8 of the Sears Plan, i.e., whether it required use of the monthly PBGC discount rate to calculate lump sum payments or authorized the Plan Administrator to use the January 1 PBGC rate instead. Section 7.8 of the Plan was taken verbatim from Section 417(e)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, which provided "that the applicable rate [would be] the PBGC rate that would be used 'as of the date of distribution,'" Pet. App. 2, but which had been interpreted in Regulations promulgated by the Treasury Department to permit either the monthly or the January 1 rate, id. at 3-4. After adopting the Plan language at issue, Sears during the class period "without interruption or exception * * * use[d] the January 1 PBGC rate in calculating the lump sum payouts," and, moreover, "clearly described" its use of the January 1 rate "in the summary plan documents furnished to all employees throughout the period." Id. at 4. Under these circumstances, the district court held, and the Seventh Circuit affirmed, that Section 7.8 of the Plan authorized Sears to use the January 1 rate. Petitioner's zeal to find an issue worthy of certiorari notwithstanding, the courts' interpretation of Section 7.8 does not raise any conflict with decisions of this Court or with the law of any other circuit.

A. Neither The Seventh Circuit Nor The District Court Found Any Conflict Between Section 7.8 Of The Sears Plan And The Summary Plan Documents.

Petitioner argues first that this Court should grant certiorari to resolve "confusion" among the circuits on "the issue of whether the plan document or an SPD controls when the two are in conflict." Pet. 7. The fundamental flaw in Petitioner's argument, however, is that that issue is simply not presented by this case, because there is no such "conflict" here, and the question of "control" never arose.

Petitioner would have this Court believe that the courts below recognized that the Sears Plan and the Sears SPD required different discount rates, but held nevertheless that Sears is entitled to summary judgment because the discount rate described in the SPD trumps the rate in the Plan. See, e.g., Pet. 5 (describing the Seventh Circuit's decision as holding "that Sears' use of the January 1 rate set forth in the SPD did not violate ERISA") (emphasis added); id. at 4 (describing the district court's decision as holding "that Sears' use of the SPD discount rate did not violate the Plan") (emphasis added). But this is revisionist history. Sears never argued, and the courts below never held, that Sears is entitled to summary judgment because the SPD "controls" in the event of a conflict with the Plan. In fact, it is clear from their decisions that neither the Seventh Circuit nor the district court found any such conflict at all. What the Seventh Circuit actually held is that it was permissible to consider "objective" extrinsic evidence in interpreting Section 7.8 of the Plan, Pet. App. 8-9, and that the "objective" evidence here established that Section 7.8 of the Plan itself permitted use of the January 1 rate.

The principal "objective" evidence considered by the Seventh Circuit was "the identity of language between the statute and the plan, together with the Treasury regulation that defines the statutory term 'as of the date of the distribution' to mean (at the election of the pension plan) either on the actual date of distribution (that is, the date of payment of the lump sum to the retiring worker) or on January 1 of the plan year in which the distribution occurs." Pet. App. 11 (emphasis added). "This convergence of statutory and regulatory language with plan language," the court held,

> "suggests that 'date of distribution' as used in the plan is a term of art, that is, a term that has a technical legal meaning different from its ordinary meaning — a technical legal meaning that in this case encompasses the use of the January 1 rate."

Ibid. (emphasis added and citation omitted). Thus, as Chief Judge Posner explained, "[t]he statute and regulation are here being used as a kind of specialized dictionary to establish" that the Sears Plan had "an objective meaning different from that in ordinary language," and in fact permitted use of the January 1 rate. Ibid.

As for the SPD, the court of appeals simply cited that document as one of several additional items of "perfectly objective" evidence — along with the fact that "use of [the January 1] rate was Sears' uniform practice, and that nobody complained during the period in which the critical language was in the plan" — that "reinforc[ed]" the conclusion that Section 7.8 of the Plan permitted use of the January 1 rate. Ibid. (emphasis added). It is abundantly clear that the court of appeals viewed the SPD not as being in conflict with the Plan, but as "a presumptively reliable guide to the contents of the plan itself." Id. at 12 (emphasis added).[1]

For that reason, the cases cited by Petitioner to demonstrate an inter-circuit conflict are simply inapposite. As Petitioner's own discussion (id. at 8-9) reflects, those cases involved a direct contradiction between the particular plan and the summary plan documents at issue, with the courts in each case holding that one or the other "controls." E.g., Glocker v. W.R. Grace & Co., 974 F.2d 540, 542 (4th Cir. 1992) (noting that plan handbook stated that availability of private-duty nursing was "'subject to the approval of AEtna'" while "[t]he Plan in contrast does not require that private-duty nursing care be subject to the approval of AEtna in order to be covered"); Marolt v. Alliance Techsystems, Inc., 146 F.3d 617, 621 (8th Cir. 1998) (noting that issue was whether plaintiff was entitled to "bridge" a break in service to increase benefits, and that "[o]n that subject, the SPD recites a number of criteria that clearly and unambiguously entitle Marolt to bridge her break in service," while "[j]ust as clearly, the Distribution Agreement [incorporated as part of the ERISA plan] rules out bridging for Marolt"). Here, in contrast, the Seventh Circuit made clear that it was not giving the summary plan documents "controlling weight," but, rather, that it considered the summary documents only as objective evidence that corroborated its interpretation of the Plan language at issue.[2/] The Petitioner does not cite a single court of appeals decision that is in conflict with this confirmatory use of the summary documents.

---

[1] The district court likewise held that Sears had adduced sufficient objective evidence to show that Section 7.8 of the Plan, like the statute that it "parroted," permitted the Plan Administrator to use either the monthly rate or the January 1 rate in calculating lump sum payouts. Pet. App. 23-25.

In short, the Seventh Circuit did not even find the Plan-SPD "conflict" posited by Petitioner, much less hold that the summary documents "control." Accordingly, even if there were "confusion" among the circuits about whether a plan document or a summary plan description "controls" in the event of a conflict, there is no basis whatsoever for the grant of certiorari in this case.

---

[2] That the court of appeals did not affirm summary judgment on the ground that the Sears summary plan documents contradict, and take precedence over, Section 7.8 is underscored by its dictum that the summary documents "would be given controlling weight" only "if the shoe were on the other foot and the plaintiff were trying to use the summary as a more generous measure of his benefits than the plan and could show that he had reasonably relied on language in the summary that was inconsistent with the language of the plan." Pet. App. 12 (emphasis added).

B. The Seventh Circuit's Application Of Federal Common Law Principles To Interpret Section 7.8 Of The Sears Plan Was Entirely Consistent With Prior Decisions Of This Court And Of Other Circuits.

Petitioner also appears to argue that the Seventh Circuit's application of federal common law principles to interpret the Sears Plan was somehow improper and in conflict with the decisions of other circuits. Pet. 10-12. This argument should be rejected for several reasons.

First, Petitioner is in no position to complain now of the Seventh Circuit's resort to federal common law to interpret the Plan, for as Chief Judge Posner recognized in his Opinion, Petitioner "agree[d] that the ordinary principles of contract interpretation govern the interpretation of pension plans covered by ERISA." Pet. App. 5 (emphasis added).

Second, and more importantly, the Seventh Circuit's decision is entirely consistent with this Court's longstanding recognition that "courts are to develop a 'federal common law of rights and obligations under ERISA-regulated plans.'" Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Bruch, 489 U.S. 101, 110 (1989) (quoting Pilot Life Ins. Co. v. Dedeaux, 481 U.S. 41, 56 (1987)). Accord, e.g., Franchise Tax Board v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1, 24 n.26 (1983) ("a body of Federal substantive law will be developed by the courts to deal with issues involving rights and obligations under private welfare and pension plans"). The Seventh Circuit in this case did just that, making clear that "the relevant principles of contract interpretation" to be applied here "are not those of any particular state's contract law, but rather are a body of federal common law tailored to the policies of ERISA." Pet. App. 5 (emphasis added). Accord ibid. ("when a case involves ERISA pension plans rather than ERISA welfare plans, the interpretive principles are also to be tailored to the distinctive characteristics of pension plans").

Third, in concluding that Section 7.8 of the Sears Plan permitted use of the January 1 rate, the Seventh Circuit relied not only upon its own prior rulings, but upon decisions of the First, Third, Eighth, and Ninth Circuits. Pet. App. 8 (citing Bolton v. Construction Laborers' Pension Trust, 56 F.3d 1055, 1059 n.2 (9th Cir. 1995); Landro v. Glendenning Motorways, Inc., 625 F.2d 1344, 1352 (8th Cir. 1980)); id. at 11-12 (citing In re New Valley Corp., 89 F.3d 143, 149-50 (3d Cir. 1996); Smart v. Gillette Co. Long-Term Disability Plan, 70 F.3d 173, 179 (1st Cir. 1995)). Moreover, the Seventh Circuit did not express disagreement with a single decision from another jurisdiction. Pet. App. 5-12.[3] And there is not the slightest basis in decisions from other circuits to conclude that another circuit would have decided this case differently.

Indeed, the Sixth and Ninth Circuit decisions cited by Petitioner (Pet. 10) actually underscore the absence of any conflict. In Cinelli v. Security Pacific Corp., 61 F.3d 1437, 1444 (9th Cir. 1995), for example, the Ninth Circuit noted "that ERISA generally preempts common law theories of contract law," but expressly recognized (id. at 1444-45) that courts "have allowed exceptions where the application of general contract principles is not inconsistent with the purposes of ERISA." Moreover, citing the Seventh Circuit's decision in Miller v. Taylor Insulation Co., 39 F.3d 755 (7th Cir. 1994), the Cinelli court specifically identified as one of those "exceptions" the common law doctrine of "latent" or [3] Indeed, if the Seventh Circuit panel had perceived a conflict with other circuits, it would have been required under Seventh Circuit Rule 40(e) to circulate its proposed opinion among the active members of the court. That did not occur here.

---

extrinsic ambiguity, the very doctrine upon which the Seventh Circuit relied in this case. See Pet. App. 7-10.

Petitioner also cites Health Cost Controls v. Isbell, 139 F.3d 1070, 1072 (6th Cir. 1997), for the proposition that "the Sixth Circuit has rejected the notion that 'federal courts [may] apply common law theories to alter the express terms of written benefit plans.'" Pet. 10. But one of the cases that the Sixth Circuit cited as authority on that score was the Ninth Circuit's decision in Cinelli, which, as shown above, recognized an "exception" for the latent or extrinsic ambiguity doctrine applied by the Seventh Circuit here. Moreover, the Sixth Circuit in Isbell made clear that "Congress intended that the judiciary would develop and apply federal common law for ERISA claims," and that "[f]ederal common law * * * fills the gaps of ERISA to assist in the interpretation of ERISA plans." 139 F.3d at 1072 (emphasis added). In any event, Isbell did not present any question of plan interpretation; rather, the issue there was whether common law equitable doctrines such as unjust enrichment could be applied to override plan terms whose meaning was not in dispute. Ibid. Here, of course, the Seventh Circuit used federal common law principles not to "alter" the Sears Plan, but "to assist in [its] interpretation." Ibid.

Finally, Petitioner argues that the Seventh Circuit "held that [Petitioner] could not recover under the terms of the Plan because he failed to demonstrate reliance on [its] terms," and that that purported holding "conflicts with the Tenth Circuit's holding in Pratt v. Petroleum Product Management Employee Savings Plan, 920 F.2d 651, 662 (10th Cir. 1990)." Pet. 10-11. But this is yet another distortion of what the Seventh Circuit decided.[4] The court never stated that plan terms are enforceable only if the participant can establish reliance, as Petitioner suggests. Rather, the observation on which Petitioner seizes was made by the court in response to his own argument that reliance upon the Treasury Regulations interpreting Section 417(e)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code was unfair because Plan participants were unlikely to have been "actually aware of the Treasury regulation." The Seventh Circuit simply noted that neither plaintiff "[n]or any other member of the class actually relied on the language of the plan" either. Pet. App. 14 (emphasis added).

II. THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT'S TREATMENT OF THE JURY TRIAL ISSUE DOES NOT CONFLICT WITH DECISIONS OF THIS COURT OR THE LAW IN ANY OTHER CIRCUIT.

A. All Ten Circuits To Have Addressed The Issue Have Agreed That No Right To Jury Trial Exists For Benefits Claims Under Section 502(a)(1)(B) Of ERISA.

Petitioner also argues that this Court should grant certiorari because the Seventh Circuit's conclusion that there is no right to trial by jury on a benefits claim under Section [4] Pratt is readily distinguishable in any event. As the Petition itself shows, all the Tenth Circuit said in that case was that it would "'not require detrimental reliance before enforcing actual, express contractual provisions that admit only of a single interpretation.'" Pet. 11 (quoting Pratt, 920 F.2d at 662) (emphasis added). But, as discussed infra at 21-22, in this case, the Seventh Circuit held that the Plan provision at issue — like the statutory section from which it was lifted word-for-word — was ambiguous, i.e., that it permitted use of either the January 1 rate or the monthly PBGC rate to calculate lump sum payments.

---

502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA (29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B)) is somehow contrary to this Court's decisions in Tull v. United States, 481 U.S. 412 (1987), Granfinanciera, S.A. v. Nordberg, 492 U.S. 33 (1989), and Chauffeurs, Teamsters & Helpers, Local No. 391 v. Terry, 494 U.S. 558 (1990). Pet. 13. This argument is meritless.

To begin, the Seventh Circuit was hardly alone in concluding that there is no right to jury trial here. As the Second Circuit recently observed, "every other federal circuit to have addressed this question ha[s] ruled that there was no such right to jury trial" in an action "for ERISA plan benefits under § 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA." DeFelice v. American Int'l Life Assurance Co., 112 F.3d 61, 64 & n.2 (2d Cir. 1997) (emphasis added).

Indeed, with the Tenth Circuit's decision earlier this year in Adams v. Cyprus Amax Minerals Co., 149 F.3d 1156 (10th Cir. 1998), ten courts of appeals have now held that no right to jury trial exists where, as here, a plaintiff asserts a right to benefits under Section 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA. E.g., id. at 1162 ("the Seventh Amendment provides no right to a jury trial" in actions to recover monetary benefits under 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B)); Hunt v. Hawthorne Associates, Inc., 119 F.3d 888, 907-08 (11th Cir. 1997) ("participants suing under section 502(a)(1)(B) are not entitled to a jury trial"); Sullivan v. LTV Aerospace & Defense Co., 82 F.3d 1251, 1258 (2d Cir. 1996) ("this Court now joins its sister circuits and decides that there is no right to a jury trial in a suit brought to recover ERISA benefits"); Cox v. Keystone Carbon Co., 894 F.2d 647, 649 (3d Cir. 1990) ("employees who sued under ERISA to receive benefits under an applicable plan were not entitled to a jury trial under section 502(a)(1)(B)").[5]

Petitioner completely ignores these cases — and the fact that almost all of the courts of appeals that have adopted or reaffirmed the rule that there is no right to a jury trial in ERISA benefits cases have done so in opinions issued after this Court's decisions in Tull, Granfinanciera, and Terry. Thus, in determining whether a right to jury trial exists, the courts of appeals have assessed "the nature of the action," Tull, 481 U.S. at 417, and have uniformly held that "cases involving ERISA benefits are inherently equitable in nature, not contractual." DeFelice, 112 F.3d at 64 (rejecting plaintiff's contention that her claim for ERISA benefits "is [5] See also Wilkins v. Baptist Healthcare System, 150 F.3d 609, 616 (6th Cir. 1998) (holding that "the district court properly denied his motion for a jury trial" in an "appeal * * * from the denial of benefits"); Borst v. Chevron Corp., 36 F.3d 1308, 1323-24 (5th Cir. 1994) (holding that "plaintiffs were not entitled to a jury trial" in action for recovery of surplus assets of predecessor-defined benefit plan); Spinelli v. Gaughan, 12 F.3d 853, 855-58 (9th Cir. 1993) (reaffirming, in light of Terry, Granfinanciera, and Tull, that there is no right to jury trial under ERISA); Turner v. CF&I Steel Corp., 770 F.2d 43, 47 (3d Cir. 1985) ("no jury trial is required in suits under § 502(a)(1)(B) by a beneficiary or participant against a trustee"); Berry v. Ciba-Geigy Corp., 761 F.2d 1003, 1007 (4th Cir. 1985) ("proceedings to determine rights under employee benefit plans are equitable in character and thus a matter for a judge, not a jury"); Blau v. Del Monte Corp., 748 F.2d 1348, 1357 (9th Cir. 1984) (holding that there is no "independent constitutional or statutory right to jury trial in ERISA actions"); Bugher v. Feightner, 722 F.2d 1356, 1360 (7th Cir. 1983) (reaffirming that there is "no right to a jury trial in an action brought by a beneficiary under 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B)"); In re Vorpahl, 695 F.2d 318, 322 (8th Cir. 1982) (holding that "a jury trial is not required under section 502 [of ERISA]").

---

more properly characterized as a legal claim for breach of contract, with the relief of money damages, and that she therefore has an absolute right to trial by jury under the Seventh Amendment"). See also, e.g., Cox, 894 F.2d at 649 ("a section 502(a)(1)(B) claim for benefits [is] equitable in nature, and * * * hence plaintiff [is] not entitled to a jury trial"). The courts of appeals also have consistently characterized the "remedy sought," Tull, 481 U.S. at 417, as equitable where, as here, the plaintiff's entitlement to the claimed ERISA benefits hinged on an issue of Plan interpretation. E.g., Adams, 149 F.3d at 1162 (holding that the remedy sought is equitable when "the resolution of [plaintiffs'] claims for monetary relief turns on a determination of their eligibility under the plan"); Hunt, 119 F.3d at 907-08 (holding that plaintiff's "only" claim in an action under section 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA was for "equitable relief").

Moreover, while the courts of appeals have treated all claims under Section 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA as equitable, both in nature and with regard to the scope of available remedies, this characterization is particularly apt where, as here, the "benefit plan gives the administrator * * * authority to determine eligibility for benefits or to construe the terms of the plan." Firestone, 489 U.S. at 115. The courts of appeals have found "the presumption of correctness that attaches to private administrative action" in these circumstances to be "incompatible with a jury trial scheme." Sullivan, 82 F.3d at 1258. Accord, e.g., Wardle v. Central States, Southeast & Southwest Areas Pension Fund, 627 F.2d 820, 830 (7th Cir. 1980) ("the limited scope of review bespeaks a legislative scheme granting initial discretionary decisionmaking to bodies other than the federal courts, with which federal jury trials have proved incompatible"). The Sears Plan expressly authorizes the Plan Administrator "[t]o conclusively determine, in his sole discretion, all questions arising under the Plan, including the power to determine the rights and eligibility of employees, participants, contingent annuitants and other persons, and the amounts of their retirement incomes or other benefits under the Plan and to remedy ambiguities, inconsistencies or omissions." Resp. App. 5a (emphasis added). This Plan language plainly gives rise to an "arbitrary and capricious" standard of review, Firestone, 489 U.S. at 115, which "has traditionally been done by judges." Wardle, 627 F.2d at 830; see Pet. App. 25.

In sum, then, the Seventh Circuit's denial of a jury trial in this action for ERISA benefits is fully consistent with the unanimous approach of every court of appeals to have faced the issue and with this Court's decisions in Tull, Granfinanciera, and Terry.

B. Petitioner's Seventh Amendment Argument Rests On Mischaracterizations Of The Facts And Law.

Petitioner fails to cite a single court of appeals case holding that a plaintiff asserting a claim for ERISA benefits under 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B) is entitled to a jury trial. In lieu of such authority, Petitioner tries to transform his ERISA benefits claim into one for the immediate and unconditional payment of money damages for breach of contract, for which there may be a right to a jury trial. This argument, however, relies on three deeply flawed premises.

First, Petitioner suggests, on the basis of two decisions of the Tenth Circuit, that this action is analogous to a breach of contract claim. Pet. 13-15. But those cases do not support Petitioner's contention; to the contrary, both Tenth Circuit decisions are fully consistent with the unanimous view of the courts of appeals that an action like this one is equitable, not legal, in nature. Second, Petitioner claims that the remedy he seeks is the immediate and unconditional payment of money damages. Id. at 15-16. This, too, is wrong, as the courts of appeals have consistently held in cases requiring an interpretation of Plan language. And, third, Petitioner submits that "there is no eligibility issue (and hence no equitable issue)" in this case, id. at 16 — despite the fact that the entire case turned on whether, under the specific language of the Sears Plan, Petitioner was entitled to the additional benefits he claimed.

As demonstrated below, once these mischaracterizations of the relevant facts and law are exposed, there can be no question that the Seventh Circuit accurately stated and properly applied the unanimous rule of the courts of appeals in the circumstances presented here.

1. This Case Is Not Analogous To A Breach Of Contract Claim.

In an effort to evade the unanimous holdings of the courts of appeals, Petitioner attempts to recast his claim for ERISA benefits as one for breach of contract. Pet. 13-15. However, the only cases on which he relies actually undermine his cause.

Petitioner begins his discussion by acknowledging that earlier this year, in Adams v. Cyprus Amax Minerals Co., 149 F.3d 1156 (10th Cir. 1998), the Tenth Circuit joined all of its sister circuits in holding that ERISA benefits actions are "equitable in nature." Pet. 14 (citing Adams, 149 F.3d at 1161). However, Petitioner then contrasts Adams with an earlier Tenth Circuit decision, Pratt v. Petroleum Production Management, Inc. Employee Savings Plan & Trust, 920 F.2d 651 (10th Cir. 1990), which he claims "has described the nature of the issue here as a breach of contract" — a "legal" claim for which a jury trial is available. Pet. 13. Finally, Petitioner contends that this case is like Pratt, not Adams. But even a cursory examination of those two cases demonstrates that this is not so. Indeed, precisely the opposite is true.

Most significantly, the Pratt court did not even hint, much less hold, that the plaintiff had a right to a jury trial in that case. As the Tenth Circuit explained in Adams, the court in Pratt never "addressed the jury trial issue or the broader issue of whether an ERISA § 1132(a)(1)(B) action is best characterized as legal or equitable." 149 F.3d at 1160.

Moreover, Pratt is factually inapposite. As Petitioner recognizes, Pratt "involved the application of an unambiguous valuation procedure." Pet. 14 (emphasis added) (citing Adams, 149 F.3d at 1160). Thus, as the Tenth Circuit explained, "[a]n action by recognized beneficiaries to enforce the unambiguous terms of a plan," such as Pratt, "is more readily characterized as a breach of contract action than the more general eligibility claim raised" in Adams. 149 F.3d at 1160 (emphasis added). But this case is entirely different from Pratt — and, in fact, is much like Adams, in which "the central issue * * * involve[d] an eligibility determination based upon the interpretation of terms left undefined in the plan." Id. After analyzing the particular facts presented here, the Seventh Circuit found that the Sears Plan — like the federal statute on which it was based — was ambiguous, that is, it permitted the Plan Administrator to use either the January 1 or the monthly PBGC rate. Pet. App. 14. Similarly, the district court found that the evidence "demonstrate[s] that there was an extrinsic ambiguity in the contract," which the Plan Administrator had an obligation to interpret "reasonably." Pet. App. 25. Under these circumstances, Pratt provides no support whatever for Petitioner's contention that his claim is in some fashion analogous to a breach of contract (and hence legal in nature).

2. Petitioner's Suit Is Not An Action For "Money Damages," But Rather Is An Equitable Action For Benefits Under Section 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA.

Petitioner's second gambit is to reformulate his suit for ERISA benefits as one for "unconditional and immediate" monetary relief. Pet. 16. This characterization fares no better than the breach of contract analogy, as the courts of appeals have consistently rejected efforts by Plan participants, like Petitioner here, to characterize the "remedy sought," Tull, 481 U.S. at 417, in their suits for ERISA benefits as "money damages." For example, in Adams — one of the principal cases cited by Petitioner — the Tenth Circuit explained as follows:

> "Plaintiffs would like us to believe they seek only money damages and thus fit squarely within the Terry holding. * * * What Plaintiffs overlook, however, is the fact they have no entitlement to the benefits unless and until a court exercises its equitable powers to declare Plaintiffs eligible beneficiaries of the plan and thus order Defendants, as fiduciaries, to pay benefits."

149 F.3d at 1161-62. Similarly, the Eleventh Circuit has held that

> "[t]he nature of an action under section 502(a)(1)(B) is for the enforcement of the ERISA plan. Although the plaintiffs assert that they are claiming money damages, in effect they are claiming the benefits they are allegedly entitled to under the plan."

Blake v. Unionmutual Stock Life Ins. Co., 906 F.2d 1525, 1526 (11th Cir. 1990).[6] See also Hunt, 119 F.3d at 907-08 ("hold[ing] that [plaintiff's] claim for legal relief (i.e., a money judgment) under section 502(a)(1)(B) fails to state a claim * * *, leaving only his claim for equitable relief * * * to recover his lump-sum benefit").

Petitioner expressly brought his action under Section 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B), to recover the difference between the lump sum he received in 1991 and the amount he would have been paid had the lower monthly PBGC interest rate been used to calculate his payout. See Pet. C.A. App. 71, 73 (¶¶ 37, 44 of Petitioner's complaint). Despite the fact that Petitioner ultimately seeks the payment of money, he has no right to that money "unless and until" a court (or the Plan Administrator), performing the equitable act of construing the Plan language, resolves in his favor the threshold question of his entitlement to the claimed benefits. Furthermore, as pointed out above, the equitable character of this remedy is all the more apparent where, as here, the Plan Administrator had been given discretion to "remedy ambiguities." Resp. App. 5a. For all of these reasons, Petitioner's claim falls four-square within the scope of the cases cited above, and Petitioner cannot seriously contend that any court of appeals would treat his suit as anything other than an action for ERISA benefits for which no right to jury trial exists.

---

[6] Similarly, the Cooke treatise, on which the Seventh Circuit relied (Pet. App. 8), after noting that cases precluding a jury trial under ERISA are "legion," concludes that jury trials are not available in "a suit for benefits" which, like this case, "involves an issue of interpretation of the plan." 2 Ronald J. Cooke, ERISA Practice and Procedure § 8.15, at 8-84 to 8-85 (2d ed. 1996).

Moreover, even if this case were governed not by ERISA, but by the Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 198 — as Petitioner suggests, Pet. 16 — the result is the same. The Illustrations accompanying that section make plain that a beneficiary has a right to a jury trial only if the trustee fails to perform a ministerial act which he has a clear obligation to do. Illustration 5, in particular, indicates that a beneficiary cannot maintain an action at law against the trustee where, as here, the claim hinges on the trustee's exercise of discretion. The Tenth Circuit reached the same conclusion in Adams, stating that it could "not see how Plaintiffs can claim they are unconditionally and immediately entitled to benefits under the * * * Plan when * * * the resolution of their claims for monetary relief turns on a determination of their eligibility under the plan." 149 F.3d at 1162. Thus, as the Adams court recognized, its holding that "[t]he remedy Plaintiffs' seek pursuant to 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B) is * * * equitable" was "consistent with the delineation of beneficiaries' remedies under trust law." Ibid. (citing Restatement (Second) of Trusts §§ 197-198 (1959)).

In short, Petitioner cites no case even remotely like this one — an action by a Plan participant under Section 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA involving the interpretation of a particular, ambiguous Plan provision which the Plan Administrator had discretion to reasonably construe — in which a jury trial was granted on the basis of an immediate and unconditional duty on the part of the trustee to pay money damages.

3. This Case Plainly Involves An Eligibility Issue, And Thus Is Equitable.

Finally, Petitioner falls back on an unfounded contention that "there is no eligibility issue (and hence no equitable issue)" in this case. Pet. 16. Petitioner bases this argument on a purported dichotomy between ERISA "eligibility" claims, for which a jury trial is unavailable, and claims requesting a calculation of ERISA lump sum benefits, for which Petitioner believes a jury trial is available. Ibid. However, this claimed dichotomy is wholly unsupported in the case law. To the contrary, the courts of appeals have treated all claims under Section 502(a)(1)(B) of ERISA — even those seeking a lump sum payment — as equitable for purposes of the Seventh Amendment right to jury trial. E.g., Hunt, 119 F.3d at 907-08 (rejecting plaintiff's argument that he was entitled to a jury trial in his action to recover a lump sum pension under Section 502(a)(1)(B), and holding that plaintiff's "only" claim was "for equitable relief * * * to recover his lump-sum benefit"). The particular circumstances presented here simply confirm the wisdom of this approach. The sole question presented in the courts below was whether, under the particular language of the Sears Plan, Petitioner was entitled to the additional benefits he claimed; that is, whether Petitioner was eligible for such benefits. As Petitioner concedes, the circuits are "in accord * * * that questions of eligibility [for] ERISA benefits are equitable in nature." Pet. 14. This is simply another case in that mold, and thus offers absolutely no basis for a grant of certiorari.

CONCLUSION

The petition for certiorari should be denied.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM A. GORDON
Counsel of Record
GARY A. ISAAC
CHARLES F. REGAN, JR.
ROBERT M. DOW, JR.
Mayer, Brown & Platt
190 South LaSalle Street
Chicago, IL 60603
(312) 782-0600

Counsel for Respondents

NOVEMBER 1998

Treas. Reg. § 1.417(e)-1T Restrictions and valuations of distributions from plans subject to section 401(a)(11) (temporary).

* * *

(ii) In determining the present value of the nonforfeitable accrued benefit, a defined benefit plan must use an interest rate not greater than the rate used by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC) to value immediate annuities for plans terminating as of either (A) the proposed distribution (or benefit commencement) date or (B) the first day of the plan year that contains the proposed distribution (or benefit commencement) date (the PBGC rate.).

* * *

(e) Present value requirement—(1) Interest rate. For purposes of determining the present value of any accrued benefit and for purposes of determining the amount (subject to section 415) of any distribution, a defined benefit plan must use an interest rate not greater than the PBGC rate determined in the same manner and time as set forth in paragraph (b)(2)(ii). The same rate must be used for both purposes.

50 Fed. Reg. 29371, 29375-76 (1985).

SEARS PENSION PLAN

(As Amended and Restated Effective as of January 1, 1991)

January 1, 1991

S001545

7.8. Actuarial Equivalents. Except where covered by a table attached to the Plan, in determining whether one form of benefit is the "actuarial equivalent" of another form of benefit under the Plan, the following will be the actuarial assumptions to be employed under the Plan:

Interest Rate: 8% per annum, compounded annually

Mortality Table: The Unisex Pension 1984 Table, set back one year, except that:

(a) In calculating the lump sum actuarial equivalent of any amount to be paid in a lump sum pursuant to subsection 7.4, the interest rate to be employed will be:

(i) for determinations effective prior to January 1, 1991,

(A) the lesser of 8% or the interest rate determined under clause (i)(B) below with respect to that portion of such participant's monthly retirement income which was accrued through December 31, 1985; and

(B) the interest rate (immediate or deferred, whichever is appropriate) which would be used (as of the date of distribution) by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation for purposes of determining the present value of a lump sum distribution on plan termination, with respect to that portion of such participant's monthly retirement income accrued after December 31, 1985; and

(ii) for determinations effective after December 31, 1990,

(A) the lesser of 8% or the interest rate determined under clause (i)(B) above with respect to that portion of such participant's monthly retirement income which was accrued through December 31, 1990; and

(B) with respect to that portion of such participant's monthly retirement income which was accrued after December 31, 1990,

(I) if the sum of the lump sum value determined under clause (ii)(A) above plus the lump sum value of the participant's post-1990 accrued benefit calculated by using the interest rate determined under clause (i)(B) above are less than $25,000, the interest rate determined under clause (i)(B), and

(II) if the lump sum value in clause (ii)(B)(I) above is at least $25,000, 110% of the interest rate determined under clause (i)(B) above, provided that use of the 100% factor may not result in lump sum of less than $25,000.

(b) In calculating amounts payable pursuant to options under subsections 7.1 and 7.2, the above-described mortality table shall be applied without any setback.

* * *

8.2. General Powers, Rights and Duties. In addition to the powers, rights and duties conferred or imposed upon the Pension Plan Administrator elsewhere in the Plan or by law, the Pension Plan Administrator shall have the following powers, rights and duties:

(a) To conclusively determine, in his sole discretion, all questions arising under the Plan, including the power to determine the rights and eligibility of employees, participants, contingent annuitants and other persons, and the amounts of their retirement incomes or other benefits under the Plan, and to remedy ambiguities, inconsistencies or omissions, and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, where records relating to any employee's continuous service, credited past service, credited future service, and compensation are not readily available, to estimate any or all of such factors, which estimates will be conclusive on all persons unless demonstrated to be incorrect to the satisfaction of the Pension Plan Administrator.